Abstract

The reach of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) has gone beyond its traditional spheres of trading in goods to influencing the mobility of skilled labour and thus having an impact on migration patterns. The growing influence of the WTO has led to the enforcement and implementation of the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS), which calls for the liberalisation of services, including the movement of 'natural persons' for the purposes of providing services in member states of the WTO under mode 4 of the Agreement.

Globalisation, liberal market economies and the increased mobility of skilled labour have led to a merging of the trade and migration communities globally. With fears running high of a skilled exodus from developing countries to developed countries, known as a brain drain, questions arise as to who the brain drain benefits, what the purpose of mode 4 is, and whether developing countries can use mode 4 to solve their brain drain as its emphasis is on the movement of skilled labour on a temporary basis. The rapid changes globally have been fueled by a shift in major industrial economies from industrial economics to knowledge based economies; these rely heavily on highly skilled labour for economic growth and wealth creation, this process has also been aided by the growing capacity of developing countries to produce skilled labour. Using South Africa as an example, the following thesis will assess what impact mode 4 of the GATS will have on developing countries in the midst of a skills shortage and brain drain. It will provide a general understanding of what the GATS is, while also showing what effect the brain drain, immigration policy, neo-liberalism and globalisation will have on mode 4 negotiations within the WTO.

Dedication

This research is dedicated to the BaThembu family. May you continue to grow, prosper, and strive to use your individual and collective energy towards the betterment of South Africa and the African Continent as a whole.

Acknowledgements

Firstly I acknowledge my parents, who have emphasized the importance of education and sent me to educational institutions that shaped my personal development. May you continue to be blessed by infinite love and happiness. My grandmother's wisdom has been critical in shaping my thoughts, perspectives, and understanding in certain areas, while I have learned a lot from my interaction with my siblings.

The University of the Witwatersrand, through granting me the Postgraduate Merit Award, has allowed me the opportunity to do my Master's Degree. This has been important in my development within the subject of international relations (IR), and allowed me to tutor in one of the best institutions on the African continent. My lecturers in the IR department have all played an important role through insightful dialogues and debates, and my involvement in the department has opened up opportunities locally and in the international community. My involvement in a number of initiatives where the department has been a stakeholder has broadened my thinking, and expanded my interest in international relations and academia in general.

The Student Representative Council (SRC) of 2006/7, of which I was fortunate enough to have been a part of allowed me to learn important lessons on student governance in higher education. It is important that I acknowledge my students, whom I have enjoyed tutoring and discussing all matters related to international relations and academic development in general. A special mention goes to my friends, especially those that I stayed with in 906, who took the time to listen to my thoughts and engage in insightful discussions. Their receptive ears and constant support played a great role during an important time of my life.
