

UBUNTU, ZIMBABWE AND THE ETHICS OF INTERVENTION

by
PETA DE JAGER

research report
submitted in partial fulfilment for the degree of

Master of Arts
APPLIED ETHICS FOR PROFESSIONALS
(by coursework and research report)

In the Faculty of Humanities
University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg

February 2010
Supervised by Dr. Brian Penrose

ABSTRACT

The profound and extensive nature of difficulties in Zimbabwean current affairs raises a moral dilemma for South Africa: should it intervene in some way, or respect Zimbabwean sovereignty? Is there a plausible 'middle ground' theory to resolve this dilemma?

This paper argues that there may well be. It further argues that such a 'middle ground' account is consistent with at least one version of ubuntu, an indigenous sub-Saharan African philosophy. What does ubuntu have to say about the right (or perhaps even the obligation) of the South African government to have intervened in Zimbabwean affairs? Does it vindicate South Africa for its failure to intervene? This project, whilst not providing a decisive answer to the question of whether intervention in Zimbabwe by South Africa is legitimate on this African world-view, provides one possible approach to evaluating the dilemma from an ubuntu-informed perspective.

KEYWORDS: uBuntu, Zimbabwe, ethics, intervention, sovereignty, South Africa, philosophy, applied ethics, international relations.

ⁱ FRONTISPIECE: Akan gold weight from "African Voices" depicting the Ghanaian allegory of the two crocodiles who share a stomach, but still fight over food.

SOURCE: African Voices \(Mason\)