The bachelor thesis “Transformation of the Praha-Bubny station over time and its future” deals with the Prague railway station Praha-Bubny which until nowadays belongs to the peripheral section of the so called Holešovice`s meander. In this work historical development of this area is being described since the first settings at the ford connecting meander with the city, through the industrial revolution and foundation of this railway station until its closing and planned reconstruction. However, the main topic of this thesis is to focus on the remaining industrial buildings and to point at their historical value and need of their preservation. In individual chapters are being discussed influences of various historical events on those buildings standing in the railway station area.
