

PROTESTING THE NATIONAL IDENTITY: THE CULTURES OF PROTEST IN 1960s JAPAN

A dissertation presented to the Faculty of Arts
of the University of Sydney in fulfillment of the requirements for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

By Peter Gerald Kelman
January 2001

Acknowledgements

For such a personal project it seems incredible how many people assisted me in the production of this thesis. First and foremost my thanks goes to Rikki Kersten, my supervisor. I feel fortunate to have studied with such a fine scholar who is also committed teaching.

Vera Mackie and Jim Masselos also provided invaluable assistance and feedback at every stage of this project and I am indebted to their generosity.

I am grateful to Professor Kurihara Akira at Rikkyō University for his willingness to supervise my research in Japan. Along with Namiyoka Shintarō and Igarashi Akio in the Law Department, Kurihara Akira facilitated my research. During this time I was lucky enough to interview Yoshikawa Yūichi, Fukutomi Setsuo and Douglas Lummis. Also in Japan, Ikeda Kaori and Matsumoto Shinichi helped me to enjoy life in Tokyo.

At the University of Sydney I am grateful to Glenda Sluga and many others in the History Department for their comments on my research. In addition, friends in the Postgraduate Arts Centre (PGARC) provided emotional and intellectual support. Namely, John Attridge, Nina Koutts, Maggie Pickering, Olwen Pryke, and Lisa Slater.

In Melbourne and elsewhere Monica Dux, Caitlin Mahar, Ryoko Otomo, and Miyume Tanji provided the support, feedback, stimulation and distractions to make my research possible.

The Visiting Scholars Scheme at the Australian National University provided an opportunity for research in a dynamic environment. I would like to thank Tessa Morris-Suzuki and Gavan McCormack for allowing me to take part in the programme at ANU as well as Julia Humphrey, Ben Dorman and Jeremy Taylor.

Finally I am grateful to flatmates at Bourke Street, Brunswick Street, Station Street and in Kawaguchi.

I dedicate this thesis to my mother and father.

Editorial note

Translations of Japanese article and book titles are included in the bibliography

Table of contents

Introduction: Protesting national identity	6-28
Protest	7
Reading protest	10
Re-reading protest	18
Reading national identity	22
Re-reading national identity	24
Chapter One: Imagining national identity	29-77
Who speaks for the nation?	30
Society, state, modernity and the nation in postwar Japan	37
i. Maruyama Masao	42
ii. Takeuchi Yoshimi	47
iii. Oda Makoto	54
iv. Tsurumi Shunsuke	58
v. Yoshimoto Takaaki	61
The nation and its histories	67
Performing the national identity	72
Conclusion	75
Chapter Two: Discovering autonomy in protest: Ampo 1960 and 1970	78-122
1960: Ampo demonstrations	79
1960: Contesting democracy	92
i. Disillusionment with parliamentary democracy	93
ii. The emergence of autonomous movements	97
1970: Anticipating 1970	104
i. The political machinations	106
ii. The cultures of protest	113
Conclusion	121
Chapter Three: The Vietnam War, protest and national identity	123-161
The Vietnam War and Japan	125
Beheiren: Forging a national identity through protest	140
i. New forms of political expression	145
ii. Japan in the world	155
Conclusion	160

Chapter Four: Citizens' activism and the Intrepid Four 162-204

The press and controversy	165
The significance of desertion	177
i. America and democracy	179
ii. America and the ambivalence of democracy	188
iii. The second 'reverse course'	196
Conclusion	203

Chapter Five: Residents' activism, Sasebo 1968 205-247

The politics of the port call	207
In the eye of a cyclone	211
In the wake of the Enterprise	215
i. The nuclear allergy	217
ii. The people and the state	222
The reaction of local residents	224
The village of postwar Japan	229
Defining the postwar village	232
i. Beheiren and citizens' activism	232
ii. Sasebo and residents' activism	236
Conclusion	245

Chapter Six: Student activism and the 'struggle' for democracy 248-293

The disputes at Tōdai and Nichidai	249
i. Tōdai	250
ii. Nichidai	254
Zenkyōtō	257
i. The struggle for democracy	257
ii. The cultures of protest	267
iii. Beheiren and unified action	273
Zenkyōtō, Beheiren and Yoshimoto Takaaki	275
Struggling to define protest	282
Conclusion	292

Conclusion: The legacies of protest 294-299

Bibliography 300-328