

I wish
I had an
Afro

JOHN SHEARER

I
A

wri

This hone
unsparing
the innerr
a poor b
heart of o
in the U
mother, i
woman. $ child and strong, bi been far f
too prote
John, is
worker wh ing for his gues with militant yc achieve a
mit that pa
the black r

And then sensitive reader's h er's. He is aware of t
side his h
strong prid
hears that to put all b
doesn't thi
wants to w
his father, i eration gap

Co

I wish I had an Afro

by John Shearer

COWLES BOOK COMPANY, INC., NEW YORK

It
A

writ

This honest, unsparring look at the inner life of a poor black child in the U.S. mother, is a woman. Strong, but too protective. John, is a worker who ing for his gues with militant you achieve a bit that pas the black m

And then the sensitive bi reader's heier's. He is aware of the side his hor strong pride hears that s to put all bla doesn't think wants to wea his father, in eration gap,

Con

Little John

My name is John McDaniels. Right now I be eleven years old, but my birthday is in October, so soon I'll be twelve.

Me an' my family an' my dog, Duke, live in Greenburgh — in Westchester. My teacher last year told me Westchester has lotsa money. Well, I live here an' I don't have any money. The part of Greenburgh where I live is called Fairview. It's sort of a little place maybe about six blocks long. I've lived here all my life in the same old house. All my life — right on the top floor. My ma always be sayin' we live worse than all those people you read about in the South 'cause it gets so cold in our house an' the roof leaks. I don't like those cold breezes whooshin' through the cracks, but I like this old house. I don't think we live so bad. Ma worries too much!

I
A

writ

This hones
unsparingly
the innermi
a poor bla
heart of on in the Un mother, is woman. S
child and
strong, but
been far fr too protect John, is a worker who ing for his
gues with militant you
achieve a
mit that pass
the black ma

And then th
sensitive bo
reader's hea
er's. He is aware of the
side his hom
strong pride
hears that s
to put all bla
doesn't think
wants to wear
his father, in
eration gap,

Cont

My dog, Duke, been in our family almost as long as me. That's what my ma says, anyway. He lives in his own little raggedy house in back of ours. My dad says one day he's goin' to get him a real boss house. Duke is my real good friend. When I was little, this big guy was messin' with me. Well, Duke came up behind him an' bit him on the leg. That guy ran home, an' so did Duke an' me. That was a long time ago an' he's gettin' older now.

My mother's name is Rena. She's always sayin' I'm just like her. We talk all the time. I even get up late at night an' talk to her. It be real dark an' I be scared. She tells me not to be afraid of anything. She even makes me go out an' fight those big guys who take my lunch money. They make me pretty scared, though.

My ma works every day but Saturday an' Sunday at the home for old people. She leaves before I go to school an' got lots to do when she gets home. She be real tired. Sometimes when she sets down she even goes to sleep. Then she don't have to think about all the work she got to do.

Ih
A

writ

This hones
unsparingly
the innerme
a poor bla
heart of on
in the Un
mother, is woman. Sh
child and
strong, but
been far fro
too protect John, is a worker whos
ing for his gues with h
militant you
achieve a be
mit that pass
the black ma

And then th
sensitive bo
reader's hear er's. He is l
aware of the
side his hom
strong pride
hears that so
to put all bla
doesn't think
wants to wear
his father, in a
eration gap,

Cont

Rena

Yeah, I live in Westchester, but I'm not one of those Westchester housewives you hear so much about. My husband, Big John, an' I have two kids. Ronda, the oldest, is fifteen. Then there's Little John, who's eleven. That boy means the world to me. I like to have him around. People tell me it's not the best thing to keep the boy so close, but he's such a good boy, an' the youngest. An' you know a mother can't be too careful. He's the baby, after all.

There are times, though, when I have to make the boy go out an' fight, like when some boys took his lunch money. Once you let that kind of thing start, well, there's just no stoppin' it! So I had to make the boy go out an' fight. He didn't do too bad, either.

