Appalachia

Volume 71

Number 1 Winter/Spring 2020: Farewell, Mary Oliver: Tributes and Stories

Article 32

2020

Geology

Alice B. Fogel

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.dartmouth.edu/appalachia

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

Fogel, Alice B. (2020) "Geology," Appalachia: Vol. 71: No. 1, Article 32. Available at: https://digitalcommons.dartmouth.edu/appalachia/vol71/iss1/32

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by Dartmouth Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Appalachia by an authorized editor of Dartmouth Digital Commons. For more information, please contact dartmouthdigitalcommons@groups.dartmouth.edu.

Geology

When I am done walking I will look up the definition for geology—

word of earth—

in a dictionary without angles or sides that maps the peaks and valleys of somewhere I've never been. What of these spells of breeze and weight, the hesitance given to the climb, the involuntary hurry of descent will not last? Down come the small pebbles following in the footsteps of early boulders, glacial till, one rock in the crevice of my boot. If it's the force of friction that holds things close to the mountain, it is the forces of gravity and time that send them away. Can I account for the kind of repetition not to be taken for infinity?

Could I forget this exact spot where today I beheld clear light bending through clouds, the constant coincidence of meeting my loneliness in the same place as my joy?

Alice B. Fogel

ALICE B. FOGEL'S latest book is A Doubtful House (Bauhan Publishing, 2017). Her collection Interval: Poems Based on Bach's "Goldberg Variations" (Schaffner Press, 2015) won the Nicholas Schaffner Award for Music in Literature and the 2016 New Hampshire Literary Award in Poetry. Her poems have appeared in many journals and anthologies. She hikes mountains whenever possible and has completed about half of the Appalachian Trail. She is a former New Hampshire poet laureate.