For all the hardwork, dedication and the ups and downs we have faced over the past two years, we would like to dedicate this scrapbook of memories to each and every member of the class of 1987. We never could have made it without each other.

Yours to Us!

Thanks,

Cathy and Valerie

During the fall semester of 1987 one of our classmates, Lacy Whittinghill, became quite a hero. On her way back to class here in Bowling Green from her home in Clarksville, Tennessee Lacy witnessed a car accident in which a man was seriously injured. She stopped at the scene and found that the man was not breathing. She began to administer C.P.R to the victim, while other witnesses summoned an ambulance to the scene. Lacy was able to revive the victim and keep his breathing sustained until help arrived. She continued to administer C.P.R alone until a police officer arrived and assisted her in two person C.P.R. . Lacy demonstrated courage that we all hope we would be able to find within ourselves in a similiar situation. Lacy is a very special person and we are all very proud of her! Thanks Lacy for representing us well!

HOW TO HANDLE

STRESS

- Scream often.
- Stick pencils in an acoustic ceiling.
- Play hookie.
- Fingerpaint your office/lover/boss.
- Sweat profusely.
- Shoot spit wads.
- Pretend spaghetti is a finger food.
- Pack up all your cares and woes.
- Shop till you drop.
- Make silly faces at passing motorists.
- Practice snoring.
- Refuse to have a nice day.
- Play tic-tac-toe on your plaid clothing.
- Weep loudly.

Just a little advice to the freshman classes on how to handle the stress.
We have found that the least one works best, and should be done often! Good luck!

In February ,1987 our class attended the University Of Louisville student convention. Four of our classmates were chosen by the faculty to present their table clinics for competition. Both table clinics did very well in the competition. Marcheta Watts and Chantal Byers took first place honors with their clinic entitled The affects of sugarless chewing gums on plaque. Lacy Whittinghill and Robin Shadd took third place honors with the their presentation on carpal tunnel syndrome. Each group was presented with a check.

Friends help dental students drill

By NANCY MURPHY

With mouth open wide, David Valla sat patiently while his friend poked sharp, shiny instruments around his teeth.

Valla's friend, Chantal Byers, is a dental hygiene student. As a part of her degree, she works at the low-cost dental clinic in the Academic Complex.

"She needed a victim and I was it," Valla said.

Having a friend work on his mouth didn't seem to bother the Louisville freshman. He laughed and talked to Byers as she worked.

The sharp instruments drew a few complaints, but Valla said he trusted Byers more than he did other hygienists.

Many of the dental hygienists have trouble getting patients into the clinic so they drag their friends in, said Sandi Carlson, a junior from Gainesville, Ga.

Carlson said working on her friends' mouths is no different than working on anyone else's.

"If you act professionally in there, then they'll respond to you professionally," she said.

The clinic is open to faculty, their families and to students. The student cost is $4 and the faculty cost is $7, according to Dr. Ruby Meador, head of the allied health department.

The two-year program trains dental hygienists and offers a service to students and faculty at the same time, Meador said.

The students are trained in many areas with an emphasis on preventive dentistry, Meador said. Their clinic training allows them hands-on experience in several areas, including taking X-rays and filling cavities.

"We definitely know what we're doing before we work on patients," Carlson said. The students work on mannequins, then on each other, then they're allowed to work on other students and faculty, Wheeler said.

"Going from a mannequin into a real mouth is a big change," Carlson said.

The dental hygienists see three patients during their first year, Carlson said. During their second year they see eight patients each week.

Two dentists teach and assist the students. Carlson said working with the dentist familiarizes them with the real work setting.

When a patient comes into the clinic, they get an exam first. Their teeth are charted and classified by the amount of deposits, Carlson said. Then the patient makes an appointment which usually takes from an hour to 90 minutes. The student hygienist then takes x-rays, teaches the patient the correct way to brush teeth and gives each patient a toothbrush to take home.

The clinic always needs students to work on. Wheeler said she doesn't live in a dorm so she has a hard time finding patients to work on. To make an appointment, students and faculty can call the dental hygiene clinic at 745-2426.

Carlson doesn't have much trouble. "I'm in a sorority and a little sister in a fraternity. I can call the house and get someone down here if I have a cancellation."

Cathy and Briann

Chantal and Marcheta were not available for a photograph. I think Chantal had gone on a rest-room break.

In April of 1987 our entire class participated in table clinic competition at the Kentucky Dental Association Annual convention, and the Kentucky Dental Hygiene Association annual convention. Again we were well represented and two of our table clinics won top honors. Cathy Buhl and Briann Legg won first place honors with their clinic entitled Child Abuse and Neglect: The Role of the Dental Professional. They were awarded a plaque by the Kentucky Dental Association for the best table clinic presented by an auxiliary. Chantal Byers and Marcheta Watts also won first place honors given by the Kentucky Dental Hygiene Association. They too received a plaque for the best table clinic presentation. A lot of hard work was put into each table clinic that was presented and all represented Western Kentucky University well.
