High school involvement and college leadership potential have paid off for five Western Kentucky University freshmen.

The five were chosen from more than 600 scholarship applicants as the first recipients of the Alumni Leadership Scholarship, a $2,000 scholarship which is renewable for four years.

The scholarships, established in 1983 by the WKU Alumni Association, went to Jeffrey Alan Felty, Louisville; Mitchell S. McKinney, Drakesboro; Cynthia Rhea Smith, Bowling Green; and William Dell Robertson and Susan Marie Stockton, both of Morganfield.

"The Alumni Association decided it would like to contribute $10,000 to the University's scholarship efforts," said Dr. Ronnie Sutton, dean of scholastic development at WKU.

"The Alumni Association decided how they would like to use the funds and my office took it from there."

Eleven finalists were chosen in May and spent a day on the WKU campus for interviews and screening. Shortly thereafter, the five winners were announced.

Robertson and Stockton are both '83 graduates of Union County High School and questioned the possibility of two scholarships being awarded at the same school.

"I didn't think we would both get the scholarship," explained Stockton. "When we got the call at school we were each sure that the other had gotten it. I was the first to get to the phone, and after I had been told I had received the scholarship, I handed the phone to Dell. After he hung up he picked me up and swung me around—we were both so happy. I had hoped we both would get it, but we both felt so honored just to be finalists."

Robertson, the son of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Robertson of Morganfield, says he is proud to know that "other people had faith in me. This scholarship makes me feel that I've accomplished something, that all my hard work in high school has paid off.

As part of the scholarship, the five freshmen attend leadership seminars conducted by guest speakers each month designed to improve leadership capabilities.

"I see the scholarships as a chance to grow and build," said

Smith, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Billy Ray Smith of Bowling Green. "Both my parents are Western graduates. It makes me feel proud to know that I can achieve here also."

McKinney, on the other hand, feels the scholarship has opened doors which he hopes will instill in him a sense of responsibility to work and a self-pleasure for what he hopes to accomplish.

"I also think it will be a great help to me in the job market when I graduate from WKU," the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. McKinney of Drakesboro said.

According to Felty, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Troy Felty of Louisville, it also gives the student a better chance to get involved in campus activities.

"I feel it is a great step forward for Western . . . because it will allow me to become more active. A scholarship like this gives a student more of an opportunity to get involved."

Smith, a 1983 graduate of Warren Central High School, says, "I've found that the other four winners share a lot of the same problems and goals as I do. I think we all will have a chance to learn leadership qualities from more mature leaders."

McKinney, a 1983 graduate of Drakesboro Consolidated High School, has become involved in the WKU Associated Student Government and hopes to soon add the Kentucky Intercollegiate State Legislature to his college accomplishments.

Smith, an agriculture communications major, has become involved in the Block and Bridle Club and is in the English honors program.

Like McKinney, Felty has become a member of the WKU Associated Student Government by working on the public relations and student affairs committees. A graduate of Christian Academy of Louisville, he was elected president of his residence hall community.

Stockton, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Stockton of Morganfield, has also joined the student government at WKU and has been selected as pledge class president of Kappa Delta sorority.

"I think these students are perfect examples of the types of student we were trying to attract when the Alumni Association decided to fund the scholarships," said Lee Robertson, director of alumni affairs at WKU. "These are the very best students from a highly talented group of applicants. The Alumni Association is pleased to provide the funds for a program of this nature that can have major impact on the future of this institution."

According to Robertson, five additional scholarships will be awarded in each of the next three years to bring the total to 20. □

by Tami Peerman

Seventy years ago, Charlie Chaplin was making movies for $150 a week, the Ziegfeld Follies were "all the rage" and the New York baseball team adopted the name Yankees. It was also in 1913 that D.Y. Dunn and a group of a dozen other young men formed Western Kentucky University's first football team.

The 93-year-old Kirksey native returned to the Hill Nov. 19 to watch the annual rivalry between WKU and Murray State. Dunn said he was cheering for Western, although he now lives in Murray, and was afraid that if Murray lost he would have to walk home. (He had ridden to Bowling Green with a group of Murray fans.) Dunn got his ride home; Murray beat Western 7-3.

During the pre-game show, Dunn also received a Topper football jersey with his name and the number 93 on it. He also received a plaque from the Alumni Association naming him a "WKU Grand Old Grad."

Dunn's recent visit to the campus was his first in "at least 40 years," and the former student said the campus had changed quite a bit since he last saw it.

"Of course the terrain is totally different now," he said. "All these buildings at the bottom of the hill are new to me."

During the years Dunn was a student here, the University was known as the Bowling Green Normal School and the campus was all on top of the hill. It was during that time that Professor W.J. Craig, a science teacher, began the effort to establish a football team at the school. During the first year the team didn't get to play much, but then in 1914, Coach J.L. Arthur was brought to Bowling Green and the team began playing other universities and some high school teams.

While playing for the Normal School team and attending classes, Dunn also worked several part-time jobs for spending money. His jobs ranged from stoking fires in area dormitories and homes to handling the laundry for the Bowling Green Laundry and Dry Cleaning Company. He also clerked in the E. Nahm & Co. furniture store.

By 1915, the football team had acquired a bit of a reputation and began playing well enough to defeat what is now Eastern Kentucky University by a score of 20-0 in a Thanksgiving game.

"Back then the team barely had enough players for a scrimmage," Dunn said. "We had about 13 team members I guess."

Dunn said football has changed even more than the University has. In the early years of football in Bowling Green, there was no stadium and the field didn't even have a fence around it for a while. Dunn recalled that the field was usually roped off for games though.

"We used to be allowed to make a flying tackle back then, too," Dunn said. "Now they'll disqualify you for that."

One of Dunn's fondest memories from playing ball at Western comes from an Eastern-Western game.

"It was the first time they had called on me to carry the ball. Conner Ford and Leslie Shultz opened a gap in the line and I made a quick getaway through it. I had an open field almost to the goal line and then I was tackled by an Eastern safety man who could run faster than me," Dunn recalled.

"When I looked back, Coach Arthur was on his knees with both hands folded above his head. I thought he was congratulating me, but I found out later he was congratulating Ford and Shultz for opening the line. Eastern won that one."

After graduating from the Normal School in 1916, Dunn went on to graduate from the University of Kentucky in 1921 with a bachelor's degree in agriculture. From there he continued his studies at UK, receiving his master's in school administration in 1929. Also during this time, he was active in the Army and Army Reserve. He is currently the nation's senior active Army Reservist and was recently honored at a White House reception on the 75th Anniversary of the Army Reserve in Washington D.C. He holds the rank of Lt. Col. retired and has been a reservist for 66 years.

Looking back on his life, Dunn said he is proud of his part in helping to establish the football program at Western.

"We played just because we loved the game," Dunn said. "We didn't know the public would become as enthusiastic as it has. It's hard to believe it's become so popular." □

HILLTOPPER DINNER THEATRE

Summer of

by Bob Adams

Louis Cook reads Food Management magazine every month. Keeping up with trends is important to him as Western's food services director. It was an article in the trade magazine that provided the impetus for an undertaking that will begin this summer—the Hilltopper Dinner Theatre.

Performances by the dinner theatre repertory company will begin June 8 and run through August 5.

After reading the article about the success of the dinner theatre at James Madison University, Cook said he talked with Dr. Regis O'Connor, head of the communication and theatre department.

Theatre faculty members had considered a dinner theatre before, according to Whit Combs, who will direct one of the plays this summer. But Combs said that it was Cook's enthusiasm, his prompting, so to speak, that encouraged theatre faculty members.

"I am very excited about bringing to the community, locally and regionally, a form of entertainment we don't have without going to Louisville or Nashville," Cook said. "Theatre has a good reputation for quality and we will try to do our part."

Since James Madison's summer theatre has become so successful in its nine years, the managing director there, Allen Lyndrup, was brought to Western to explain their program. And Curtis Barnes, manager of the Garrett Conference Center Cafeteria, went to Harrisonburg, Va., to study the dinner part of James Madison's dinner theatre.

The two shows selected for the summer are The Boyfriend, a witty musical of the jazz age, and Move Over Mrs. Markham, described by one British newspaper as "naughty nonsense at its greatest."

Combs said the six-man, six-woman acting company will include some of Western's best performers. The 12 students will receive six hours of internship credit for the summer.

Students are very enthusiastic, Combs said, because they will be able to get professional experience during the summer without having to leave Bowling Green. The 12 members of the company will serve as the crew for the productions when they aren't on stage. They will be helping to build sets, work in the box office and assist in other ways, Combs said. He also plans to use high school students as apprentices so they can learn about all aspects of theatre and about Western's theatre program.

The first production on June 8 will be Move Over Mrs. Markham, directed by Jackson Kessler of the communication and theatre department. Presented at the Vaudeville Theatre in London, the play immediately received the acclaim of the critics as "a riot. The laughter hit of the year."

To Sylvie, it's the "goose" that she learned from Alistair, but to Philip, Joanna Markham's husband, it's a "variety of geese." Fifteen years of marriage seem just about undone along with everything else in this wild, zany free-for-all, which covers everything from Philip's business deals with Bow-Bow Brooks, Alistair's near escape from Joanna's seduction, and the near resulting scandal. There's a lot of bedhopping, as Sylvie winds up taking Alistair on "walkies" and the amazing Mrs. Markham gets her man, her husband. It all takes place in an elegant top floor flat in London. Where else?

The other play, The Boyfriend, directed by Combs, is a witty, stylish cartoon of the jazz age which spoofs the mechanics of old-style operetta, using flapper-type music and lyrics.

It takes place on the French Riviera where Polly, a millionaire's daughter, is attending finishing school. She falls in love with Tony, a delivery boy, who, of course, turns out to be the son of Lord Brockhurst. To hold his interest, Polly pretends that she's a working girl.

The play is a good-humored, tuneful and affectionate valentine to the innocence and high spirits of the Charleston, Cloche hat and short skirt days.

In addition to directing, Kessler will be costume designer and Combs will be in charge of publicity. Talents of other department faculty and staff that will be used include Jim Brown and Steve Probus, who will be designing sets for both shows; Bev Veenker, choreographer; and Bill Leonard, production manager. Terry Tichenor, a music department graduate, will be musical director.

And the menu. The buffet, which will include a 25-item salad bar, three entrees, four vegetables, a variety of breads and beverages, will begin at 6:30 p.m. Cook said that between the first and second acts there will be a dessert parade featuring cheese cake, two cobblers, pecan pie and strawberry shortcake. The parade will use the talents of the acting company, he said.

A Sunday brunch at 2 p.m. will include country ham, eggs, carved roast beef, vegetables and beverages.

Tickets for dinner and play are $12.50 for adults and $10 for children under 12. Reservations may be made through the Western Ticket Office. Seating for each performance is limited to 250.

Gift certificates for the new Hilltopper Dinner Theatre may be purchased by sending a check made out to Western Kentucky University to the Director of Theater, Communication and Theater Department, WKU, Bowling Green, KY 42101. Gift certificates are $12.50 each. Information may be obtained by calling (502) 745-3296. □

TWO WESTERN GRADS BEHIND THE PLATE

by Bob Cefalo

It is the first week in April when these two guys go to work in earnest.

But when they do, they're called upon to make split-second decisions, settle disputes and have their judgement scrutinized, if not scorned, by millions.

It's not an easy life, or the typical nine-to-five job either. From the middle of March until nearly the middle of October, these two will face hectic schedules, get very little time off and be away from families.

But that's the life of a major league baseball umpire, the chosen profession of Western Kentucky University graduates Danny Morrison and John Shulock.

An umpire's life is much like that of the athletes who play the game, except that for them every game is played on the road.

A major league season lasts 162 games. For the players, that's 81 home dates a year. But for Morrison and Shulock and the rest of the major league umps each night out, from early April to as late as mid-October, is an away game.

Morrison, like Shulock, a 1972 graduate of WKU, got some gentle urging from a sports officiating class and a teacher at Bowling Green Junior High.

"My getting into umpiring was kind of ironic," Morrison said. "I took a sports officiating class under Butch Gilbert at Western and then called a couple of years of high school ball.

"I graduated in mid-year and then worked at a men's clothing store for a while," he added. "Then, one day, Mike Cobb, a teacher at Bowling Green Junior High, said I should look toward getting into umpiring school."

With that, Morrison was off, and soon found himself in Al Sommer's umpiring school in Daytona Beach, Fla. About four weeks later he caught the eye of a major league umpire.

"One day Dick Stello, a National League umpire, asked me what I wanted to do," Morrison said. "He told me the ins and outs of umpiring. I made it through the last two weeks of school and finished second of 160."

It was then that Morrison made his steady ascent to the major leagues. The 1966 graduate of College High in Bowling Green was first assigned to the Appalachian League and was then invited to the instructional league in St. Petersburg, Fla., when the minor league season ended. Just as the major league teams use the instructional league to evaluate talent, the umpires do the same thing. It's a chance to work on flaws and sharpen skills. A steady progression followed, as Morrison umpired in the Class A Florida State League in 1975, the Eastern League in 1976 and the Triple A American Association in 1977.

"The Eastern League was really an education for me," he said. "I umpired in Canada and Connecticut and really didn't understand a soul because of the accents."

Morrison, however, continues to educate other hopefuls about the fine points of their prospective profession. Since 1976, he has been an instructor at the Bill Kinnamon Umpiring School.

Morrison, 36, got his first taste of the major leagues in 1978 when he worked the American League spring training. He spent that season in the American Association, and was scheduled to make it to the majors in 1979. That, however, was delayed by an umpires' strike.

"That year," Morrison explained, "I worked in the American Association from June 10 until the middle of September. Then, from time to time, I worked the vacation shifts in the American League as part of the strike settlement."

It wasn't until two years ago, the 1982 season, that Morrison worked his first full year in the American League. During the season, he goes from city to city, day after day, except for a two-week vacation at some point during the summer.

Morrison, who lives with his wife Gayle in Largo, Fla., was married in January of 1983.

"I've had to deal with the travel," he said. "The ballplayer has about 81 games while an umpire spends three of four days in a city and keeps on going to another one. We work 20-24 spring training games and then go right into the season."

Along with the routine calls of balls and strikes and outs, there is the additional pressure of dealing with the crowd, Morrison said.

He was in Chicago the night the White Sox staged "Disco Demolition Night." Sponsored by a radio station, admission to the game was 97 cents and a disco record which would be disposed of during that day's doubleheader. Many of the fans, Morrison said, kept their records and during the first game periodically threw them onto the field causing the action to be halted.

Morrison was in the umpires' quarters putting on the home plate umpire's gear for the day's second contest when a pile of the records was collected, and then destroyed on the field. The fans stormed the field, he said, making off with the bases and home plate. "I had no choice but to award the Tigers the victory," Morrison said. "The home team—in this case the White Sox—is responsible for field conditions."

Even in the off-season, Morrison is involved in sports. When not wearing the uniform of a major league umpire, he's working in a sporting goods store or officiating high school basketball games.

AN UMPIRE GOES FROM CITY TO CITY, DAY AFTER DAY...

Shulock's ventures took him from Western to minor league baseball prior to his gaining entry into the umpiring profession. He signed a professional playing contract with the Minnesota Twins following high school, and went to school at Western from 1967-69 before playing a couple of seasons of minor league and winter baseball. The native of Vero Beach, Fla., returned to get his degree in psychology and recreation in 1972.

"I took a sports officiating class at Western," Shulock said, "but it (becoming a major league umpire) was the farthest thing from my mind. I didn't think about it until my dad suggested it to me."

After graduation, Shulock worked as an ironworker in a nuclear power plant 15 miles from Vero Beach. It wasn't long, however, before Shulock found himself in umpire's garb. After a stint in a St. Petersburg umpiring school, Shulock first umpired in the Florida State League in 1974.

"I was just killing time before that," he said. "Then, when I was umpiring in the Florida State League, Class A ball, I became engrossed in the game.

"I wanted to become the best umpire I could, or I just didn't want to become one. I just progressed as fast as I possibly could."

From the Florida State League, Shulock spent two seasons in the Class AA Southern League and one and a half years in the American Association. In mid-season, 1978, he was promoted to the major leagues and has been there ever since. He now has five and a half years of big league experience entering the 1984 season.

A member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity during his college days, Shulock met Morrison on the intramural field where they participated in baseball, football and basketball. They also umpired together in a couple of seasons of winter baseball in Puerto Rico.

Morrison was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity.

Shulock, who is married (Cheryl) and is the father of two girls (Jackie, 8, and Sandra, 2), has his share of stories to tell. One of his favorites is about Don Zimmer, then the manager of the Boston Red Sox. Boston slugger Jim Rice hit a ball to centerfield. The Ranger outfielder, Mickey Rivers, who on other occasions had been known to nonchalantly throw the ball back to the infield, fired toward first base. Shulock, the first base umpire, ruled that the throw nipped Rice at the bag, and an argument ensued. Bosox first base coach Tommy Harper was the first one in the dispute, followed by Zimmer. By this time, Shulock was biting hard on his chewing tobacco. For effect, Shulock spit half of his chewing tobacco out onto the ground. However, when Zimmer followed suit, the manager's upper plate fell out along with the tobacco. Shulock ejected Zimmer, but the fun continued to the next day.

Before the next game of the series, when Shulock was slated to be the home plate umpire, he bought a set a wax false teeth and inserted them in an unopened package of chewing tobacco. When the teams were exchanging lineups, Shulock handed Zimmer his gift.

It went mostly unnoticed until, during the seventh inning stretch, Zimmer opened the package. A few profanities followed. Shulock just smiled and laughed! □

News Update

WKU Awarded Telecommunications Grant

The University has received a $141,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education to make use of a telecommunications system that will help classrooms in southcentral Kentucky improve instruction.

The grant is one of only 12 awarded in the nation, and will be co-directed by Dr. Glenn H. Crumb, professor of teacher education and director of sponsored programs, and Dr. Charles M. Anderson, associate dean of academic services. The project will involve making use of the Kentucky Emergency Warning System (KEWS) "to demonstrate how the resources of a university can be used to improve curriculum," says Dr. Crumb, who made the proposal for the two-year grant.

During the first year, Crumb says the focus of the project will be to make use of computers and microcomputers located in remote school classrooms to help teachers improve middle school children's skills in science, mathematics, reading and writing.

During the second year, school systems served by WKU's Professional Development Center Network, which assists 22 school districts in extensive inservice teacher education programs, will receive help from Anderson and PDC Network Director Jack Neel, who will be responsible for coordinating in-school activities.

Content specialists will also be utilized from WKU's academic departments, such as English, physics, mathematics and teacher education.

"The use of the university's technology is a very cost-effective way to provide the very best to our area schools," says Crumb, and an electronic mail system in which students and teachers may communicate in the schools is another plan of the project, Crumb says.

"We are very firm in establishing a new system for communication and instruction," Crumb says.

Teachers from schools will become involved in the planning of the program, and there is a possibility of cooperation by a local cable system, says Crumb.

"Western has a very good record in the use of modern communication techniques," Crumb says, adding this was a plus for Western in obtaining the federal grant.

"Western has an excellent record of school science instruction, and we have shown we have a very capable computer science program, including workshops conducted for WKU faculty," Crumb says.

The Tennessee Valley Authority will assist in the project, as well as the Kentucky Department of Education.

Black Faculty Increase at WKU

WKU's new faculty members for the 1983-84 academic year include four new black faculty, bringing the total to 10. They are: Wayne M. Mason, instructor of biology; Dr. Asegash Tsegaye, associate professor of nutrition; and husband-wife team, Dr. Delanyard Robinson, professor of psychology, and Mrs. Barbara J. Lee-Robinson, assistant professor of nursing.

Miller Is Writer-in-Residence at Centre College

Jim Wayne Miller, poet, author, lecturer, and member of the modern languages and intercultural studies faculty, was the writer-in-residence for the winter term at Centre College.

Dr. Miller is teaching and meeting informally with Centre students and faculty during his stay.

The 1980 Thomas Wolfe Literary Award winner has worked in poet-in-the-schools programs and has directed poetry workshops and served as consultant to Appalachian studies programs in Kentucky, Tennessee and Ohio.

He has written numerous short stories, poems and articles, and many of his writings appear in the five volumes he has so far published.

An Associated Press story about Dr. Miller went international last fall following his participation in an Appalachian Celebration in Morehead, Ky.

Miller told scholars and educators that in small communities it is easier for teachers to know students because they know their parents.

"A school curriculum can take locality and circumstances into account, paying attention not only to what is taught, but also to where it's taught and to whom," he said.

WKU Receives $500 from Peabody Coal

Western Kentucky University's department of chemistry has received $500 from the Peabody Coal Company to be used for continuing research in the University's coal chemistry program.

James Addington, director of analytical services at Peabody, who is also a member of WKU's Coal Chemistry Advisory Committee, made the award to Dr. Laurence Boucher, head of WKU's chemistry department.

In a letter to Boucher, Addington said in addition to assisting WKU's research efforts, the award will also "help alleviate the environmental concerns of marketing and using high sulfur coals, particularly in western Kentucky."

"Western is pleased to have the kind of support Peabody Coal Company has given us," said Boucher. "These are the things that really help WKU's work in the coal studies area," he said.

New Study Supports WKU's Fee Policy

A recently released research report supports the view that low tuition at public junior colleges, senior colleges, and universities is essential for equal educational opportunities in the United States. In keeping with its commitment to making quality higher education programs accessible to qualified students, WKU has kept its tuition considerably below the national norms for state universities.

The report, entitled "Low Tuition Fact Book," is very supportive of Western's policies with regard to student fees. It cites eight reasons why low fees are essential to the promotion of educational opportunities in this country:

- The percentage of high school graduates going on to college is generally lower in states with high tuition;
- The percentage of veterans using their G.I. benefits to attend college is generally low in states with high tuition;
- New data on public colleges show that a great many students at such colleges have little or no parental help and work their way through. Many students are self-supporting;
- A University of Wisconsin study found that lowering tuition increases the number going to college;
- A California study showed that lower tuition would particularly encourage low-income students to continue their education;
- Department of Labor statistics show that very few families have adequate resources for college; and
- Current federal and state student aid programs are not adequate to meet student needs.

Prins Does Streams Study in Chili

Dr. Rudolph Prins, professor of biology, is in Valdivia, Chile this semester studying the quality of life in streams there.

Prins is recipient of a $7000 award from the Organization of American States, a United Nations organization which assists Latin American countries in furthering economic, social, technical and cultural development.

Prins' award is one of 19 out of 500 applications, and he is stationed at the Zoology Institute of the University of Austral de Chile in Valdivia.

"There is considerable interest in aquatics here," says Prins, who specializes in studies of freshwater invertebrates. Since 1971, he's been involved in research at the Tech Agua Biological Station in Center Hill, Tenn., and in June he'll resume his work at the consortium.

While in Chile, however, he's doing stream research a major portion of the time, but he'll also focus on a study of "stoneflies," insects often used by anglers for bait.

When the school's fall semester begins in March, Prins will be teaching a course in freshwater invertebrates and he'll conduct a workshop at the university.

Prins says his research is an opportunity to help the region of Chile known as the "fisherman's paradise" develop baseline data of the quality of the streams in the area, which is abundant in small bodies of water.

"This is an opportunity to find something in pristine condition you can work with," he says. Prins has been a member of WKU's faculty since 1978 and has explored marine communities of the Florida Keys and the Bahamas with WKU students studying marine invertebrates "where they can be seen in full living splendor."

WKU Student Is DuPont Top Intern

John Mark Chapman, a senior agriculture major from Woodburn, was selected by DuPont Corporation as its top intern last summer.

Chapman worked in DuPont's Chicago offices' research and development section learning scientifically-oriented product testing, and he was chosen from 13 interns for the top honor at a reception hosted by DuPont officials.

Dr. Luther Hughes, WKU's agriculture department head, attended the reception.

"Even though I was invited because I served, in Missouri, as advisor to one of the internship students, I was most pleased to know that one of our Western Kentucky University students was in that group. I am delighted to say that, in my view, Mark clearly made the most outstanding presentation of the group," Hughes said.

Jones, Johnson Receive Sun Belt Honors

Senior guard Bobby Jones and freshman forward Kannard Johnson received honorable mention All-Sun Belt Conference honors following the 1983-84 basketball season.

Jones, a native of Macon, Ga., and Johnson, a product of Cincinnati's Taft High School, helped lead the Hilltoppers to a semi-final berth in the annual league tournament.

The All-Sun Belt first team included Terry Catledge of South Alabama, Charlie Bradley of South Florida, Calvin Duncan of Virginia Commonwealth, Melvin Johnson of North Carolina Charlotte, Ronnie Murphy of Jacksonville and Steve Mitchell of Alabama in Birmingham.

The second team included Otis Smith of Jacksonville, Mike Schlegel and Michael Brown of Virginia Commonwealth, Jim Grandholm of South Florida and Michael Gerren of South Alabama.

Joining the two Hilltoppers on the honorable mention list were Charlie Smith, Mark Davis and Keith Thomas of Old Dominion and Jerome Mincy of UAB.

Catledge received Player-of-the-Year honors, while VCU Head Coach J.D. Barnett was Coach-of-the-Year.

Sanderford Nominated for Coach-of-the-Year Honors

WKU's Paul Sanderford was one of several outstanding women's basketball coaches across the country nominated for the Converse Sporting Goods Company's collegiate Coach-of-the-Year Award.

The Lady Topper mentor was one of three coaches to receive the most nominations in the Southeastern region, along with Andy Landers of Georgia and Joe Ciampi of Auburn.

"I am very honored to have been nominated," Sanderford said. "It is especially rewarding because the nominations come from other coaches, my professional peers."

Sanderford has compiled a 41-15 record since coming to WKU last season, including an impressive 25-2 mark in Western's E.A. Diddle Arena. He was the unanimous choice for the Sun Belt Conference's Coach-of-the-Year award last year, after guiding his Lady Toppers to a 22-7 record and a runner-up finish in the conference tournament. Prior to his arrival on the Hill, the young coach posted a 163-19 record in his six seasons as head coach of the women's squad at Louisburg Junior College in North Carolina.

Haskins Duo Creates National Attention

WKU's Clem and Clemette Haskins are not just the talk of the town in Bowling Green, but the two basketball greats are stirring up talk across the nation.

It all began last year when "Miss Kentucky Basketball" Clemette Haskins, a two-time high school All-American, signed to play ball at Western, the very school where her father, Clem, earned All-American honors and currently coaches the men's team.

Local media attention was immediate, but recently, with the success the younger Haskins enjoys on the basketball court the WKU "family-alma mater angle" has received national coverage.

Sports Illustrated was the first national media outlet to pick up on the news, featuring Clemette in the "Faces in the Crowd" section of its November 28 College Basketball Preview issue.

USA Today, "the nation's newspaper," ran a feature story in its "Behind the Scenes in the World of Sports" on December 21. The article mentioned that Clem was returning for his fourth year of coaching the men's squad and added, "But the big news is the addition of his daughter, Clemette, to the women's team."

The broadcast end of the business jumped on the bandwagon when the Sun Belt Conference Television Network aired an interview segment with Clem and Clemette during halftime of a SBC television network telecast.

The Haskins also were featured in the Sun Belt's quarterly magazine, Inside the Sun Belt.

And National Public Radio aired an interview with the famed duo in January during its "Morning Edition" news program. Clemette told NPR host Bob Edwards that the decision to attend Western was basically hers. "He (her dad) was a big influence, but he never told me where to go. I chose Western on my own."

Clemette Haskins is making her own place in the history of Western basketball. But the talk around town, and around the nation, continues to be that of the interesting father-daughter basketball duo at Western Kentucky University.

Dates Set for Basketball Camp

Everything's set for the 2nd Annual Paul Sanderford Lady Topper Basketball Camps.

The camp sessions will take place on the Western Kentucky University campus during the weeks of June 24-29 and July 1-6. The first week will be an individual camp, available to all girls ages 10 through high school seniors. The July sessions will be varsity team camp, open to high school varsity and varsity and junior varsity teams. The camps will be directed by Lady Topper Head Coach Paul Sanderford.

"We're looking forward to two fine camp sessions again this year," Sanderford said. "We've worked hard on the plans for this year's camp. The girls will learn a great deal about the game of basketball and have fun at the same time."

Camp applications and more information are available by writing Lady Topper Basketball Office, 233 E.A. Diddle Arena, WKU, Bowling Green, KY 42101, or by calling 502-745-2133.
