

Very High Energy Electron Laser Plasma Accelerators for use in Radiotherapy

Colleen DesRosiers, IU School of Medicine; Vadim Moskvin, IU Physicist; Keith Stewart, Purdue Student

Very high energy electron beams, greater than 150 MeV, have been shown to have potential benefit in radiotherapy applications. Laser plasma technology is a highly efficient electron accelerator and this technology may be used to design an optimal radiotherapy accelerator.