

Social Bookmarking: What are the Implications for Teaching and Learning

Presented by

Cathy Carpenter and Brian Mathews

Elements of Social Software

- Web based, open-source, usually free
- Integration of software services
- Encourages collaboration/sharing
- Encourages communities of interest
- Information is based on recommendation or trust rather than authority

Forms of Social Software

- Instant Messaging/Chat
- Blogs
- RSS
- Wikis
- Social Network Services
- Social Bookmarking/Tagging

Definition- Social Bookmarking

- Wikipedia entry

“allows users to save and categorize a personal collection of bookmarks and share them with others. Users may also take bookmarks saved by others and add them to their own collection, as well as to subscribe to the lists of other via RSS”

Folksonomies

- A naturally created classification system resulting from user-created tagging
- A community categorization system rather than a traditional hierarchal classification
- Fusion of the words “folks” and “taxonomy”

Why Use Social Bookmarking Software?

- Organize & archive information
- Discover new information
- Current awareness tool (RSS enabled)
- Encourages collaborative learning environment by serving as a community writing & research tool

The screenshot shows a Mozilla Firefox browser window titled "CiteULike: Manage your watchlist". The address bar shows the URL "http://www.citeulike.org/managewatch". The browser's menu bar includes File, Edit, View, Go, Bookmarks, Tools, and Help. The toolbar contains navigation buttons like Back, Forward, Reload, Stop, New Tab, Home, Print, del.icio.us, and tag this. The browser's status bar shows various search engines and services like Bellsouth, HealthDay, Weather, GA Navigator, Dictionary, Google Scholar, Furl It, BuzzPort, WebCT Course, Corp.T., and Bloglines.

The main content area of the website is titled "CiteULike" and "Manage your watchlist". It includes a navigation sidebar on the left with sections for "Navigation", "Your Library", "Your Watchlist", and "Journals". The main content area has a search bar for "Article title" and a "Search" button. Below the search bar, there is a section titled "Remove items from your current watchlist" with a list of items, each with an "unwatch" button. The items are: "Tag folksonomy", "Tag blogs", "malin's library", and "Tag library". Below this, there is a section titled "Add items to your watchlist" and a "Help!" section.

The right sidebar contains a section titled "cc286's tags" with a list of tags: "blogs", "civic education", "engagement", "future", "geospatial", "govinf il", "information", "librarian", "libraries", "literacy", "management", "mentoring", "no-tag", "portal", "portals", "reference", "social", "tags", "technology", "virtual", and "web20".

Current Awareness (RSS feed)

The screenshot shows the Bloglines website interface. On the left is a sidebar with a tree view of feeds. The main content area displays a selected feed titled "CiteULike: cc286's blogs" with 3 items. The first item is "Library weblogs" by LA Clyde on weblogs, dated Wednesday, March 29, 2006 at 4:55 PM. The article text discusses the identification of 55 library weblogs in late 2003. Below the article are options to "Email This" and "Clip/Blog This", and a "Keep New" checkbox. The sidebar on the left lists various feed categories such as "Entertainment (96)", "library blogs (0)", "news (82)", and "research (136)". The "research" category is expanded, showing several feeds, with "CiteULike: cc286's blogs" highlighted in red.

Library weblogs

By LA Clyde on weblogs

A total of 55 weblogs maintained by libraries were identified in late 2003 using Internet search engines and directories. The weblogs were studied using content analysis techniques. Library weblogs were found in just three countries, with the majority being in the USA. Public and academic libraries were more likely to have a weblog than other types of libraries. The most common aim or purpose was to provide news, information and links to Internet resources for library users. Few provided interactive facilities, and when provided, there was little evidence that the facilities were used to any extent. Only one-fifth of the weblogs had been updated within the past day and only half within the previous week. Less than half provided an RSS feed. Given the small number of library weblogs in the study, the question of "why so few?" is discussed. Finally, the article addresses the implications of the findings for library managers.

Manage Groups

All the groups on CiteULike

Groups are collections of users. They are useful for keeping track of everyone in a lab, or everyone in a particular academic department. You can browse the articles posted by the people in any group, and you can ask to join any group yourself.

Groups you're a member of

You are a member of these groups:

- Librarians A group for academic/university/college librarians leave this group

Groups you'd like to join

You are waiting for the owner of these groups to approve your request to join:

- Blog and Wiki Research Group for research about new interactive media cancel request
- Educational Technology Working towards the successful integration of technology into education cancel request

Request a new group

You may propose a new group for any purpose you like. We'll take a look at your request and hopefully approve it very quickly. Once that happens, you will become the owner of the group and be responsible for managing it.

Concerns

Waning influence of authorities/experts (faculty, librarians, editors, publishers)

Increases need for information literacy to separate the good from the bad

Privacy issues – how much do we want others to know about us

Copyright problems as users will continue to create their own content

Future

- Increasing user- generated content (wisdom of crowds)
- It's not what you know, but who
- Fragmentation/specialization of information encourages creating communities of interest
- Informal & shared learning - independent of time or place
