

LESSONS from TEN CITIES

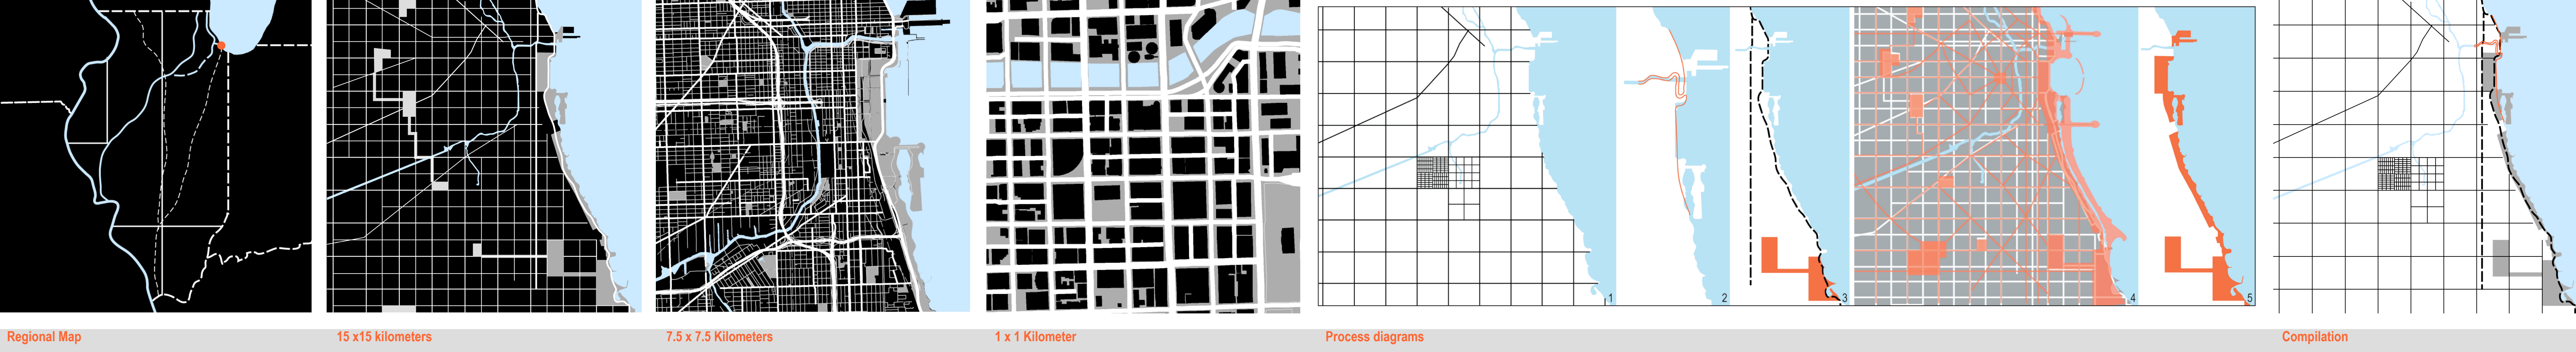

The primary ingredient of urban form is the subdivision of territory into public and private urban domains. Every project — urban design, building or landscape — in existing urban cores must understand the arrangement and dimension of lots, blocks and streets and their relationships to pre-existing ecological conditions, prior human occupations, previous interventions, political imprints and cultural desires. It is these relationships that irrigate the basics of urban form with architecture and landscape design potentials.

Atlanta

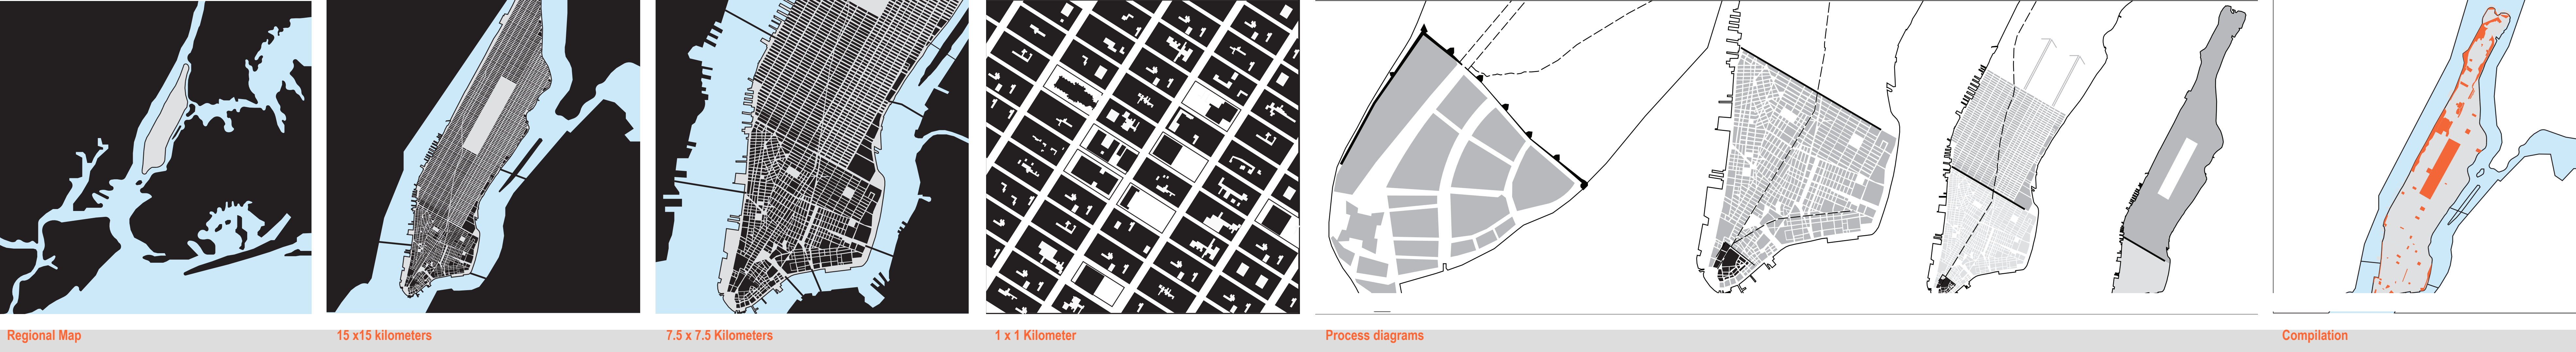

Gabriel Presley B.A. U. Kentucky, MS-UD Class of 2011 • Robert Platkowski BSCE, Georgia Tech, MCRP Class of 2011

Chicago

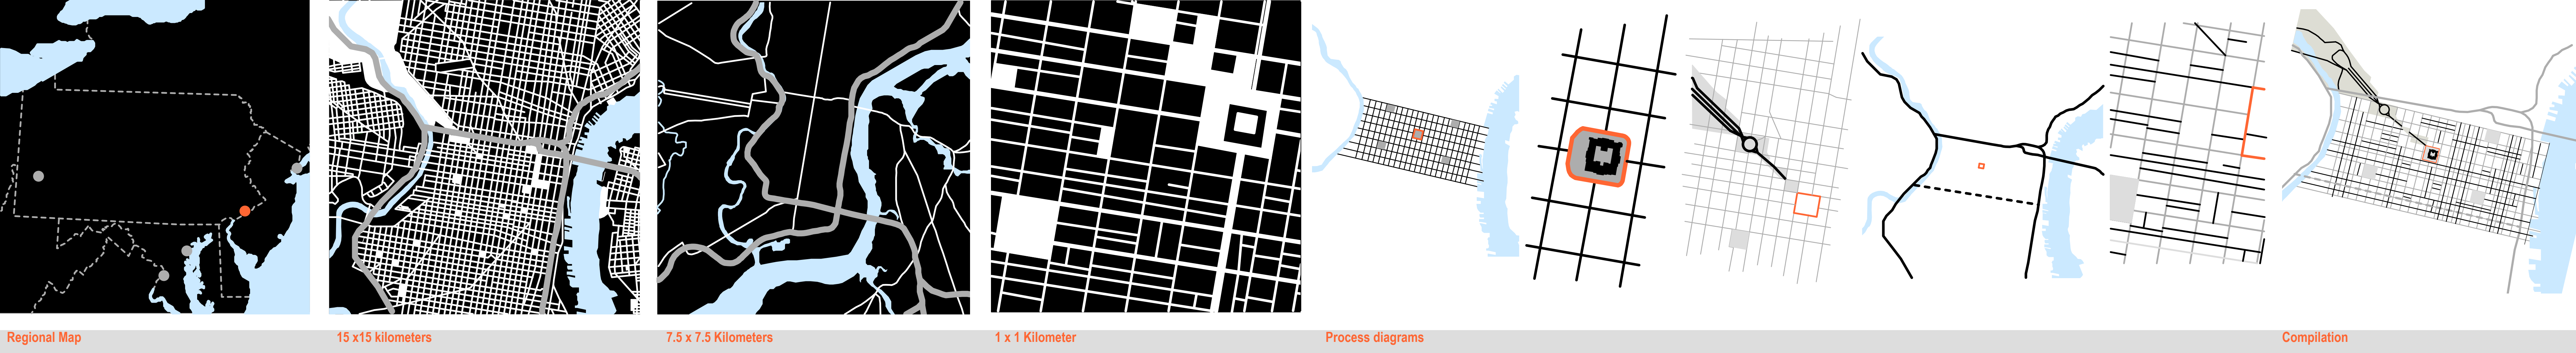

Claire Perko, B.A. Michigan State, MS-UD Class of 2011 • Najia Ali, B.Arch, U Arkansas, MS-UD Class of 2011

Manhattan

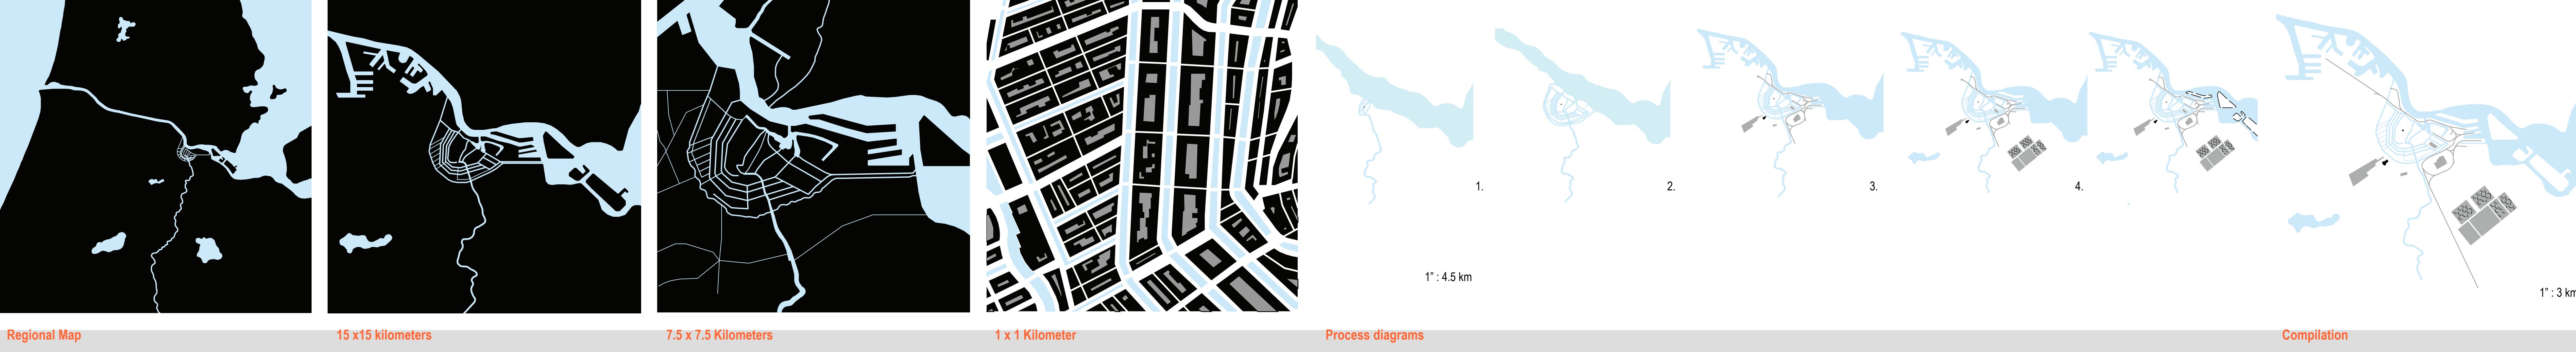

Gavin Johns, BS, Georgia Tech, M.Arch and MCRP Class of 2011 • Beza A. Beza, B.Arch, Woodbury U California, MS-UD Class of 2011

Philadelphia

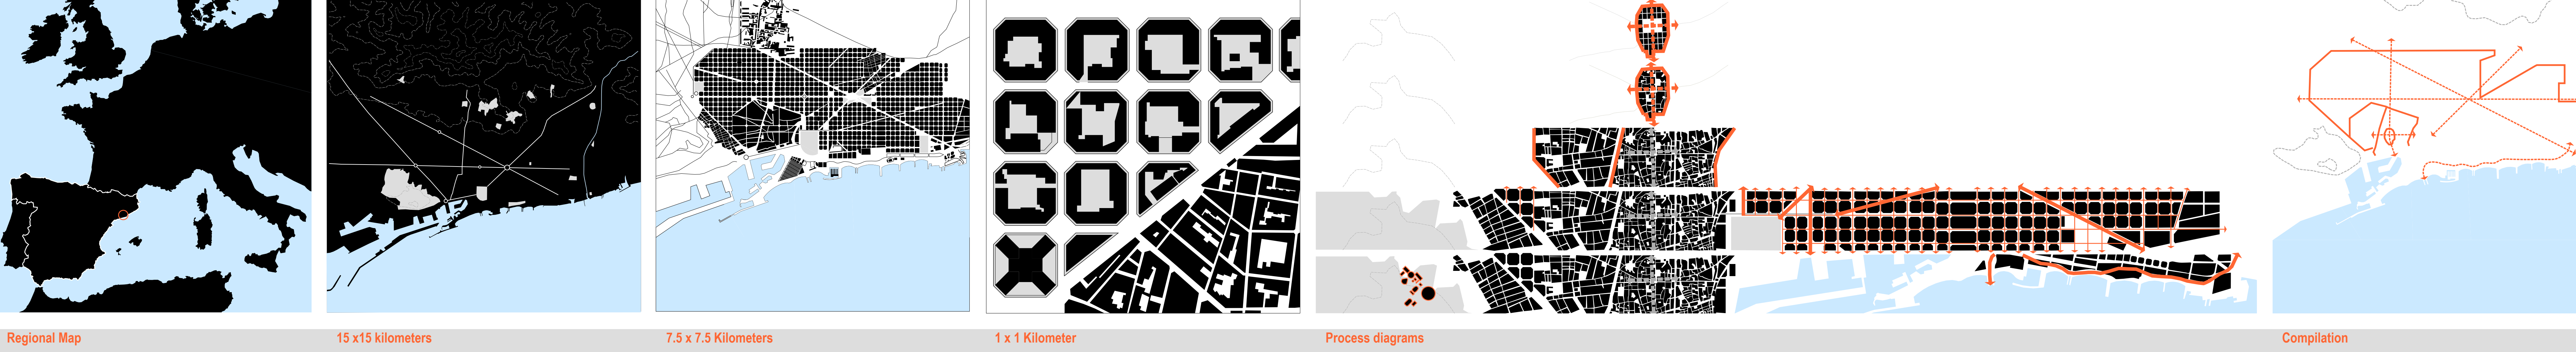

Emily Bacher, BA, Emory University, M.Arch Class of 2011

Amsterdam

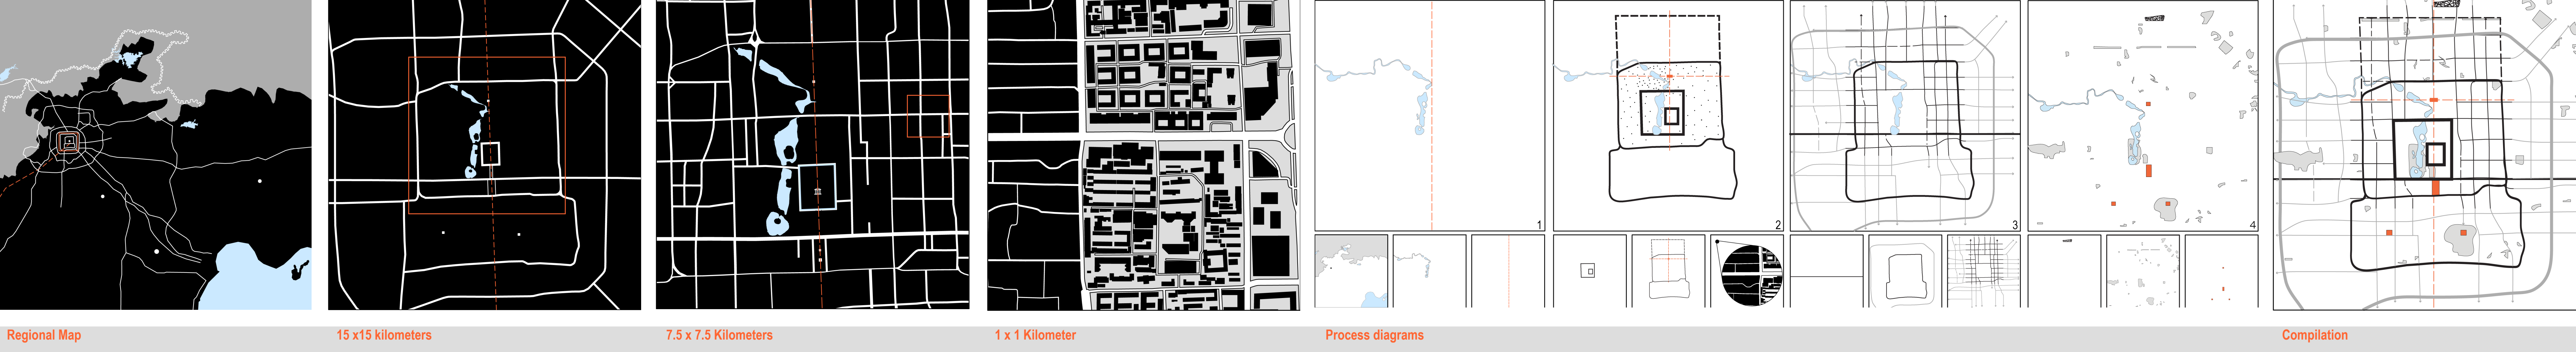

Luke W. Wilkinson, B.S. U. Georgia, Master's of Architecture 2011 • Masters of City and Regional Planning 2011 • Dereth Bush, BUEP, U. Virginia, MCRP and M.Arch Class of 2011

Barcelona

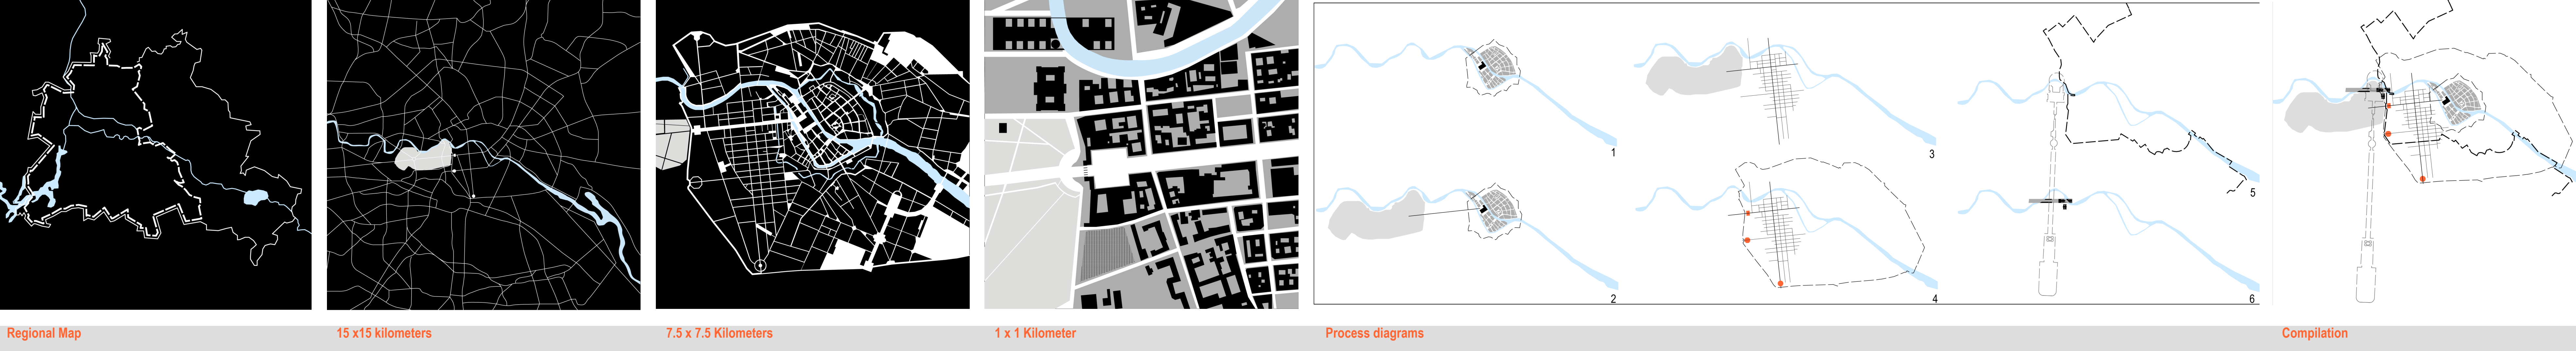

Jianqiu Yu, B.Arch, Beijing U. of Civil Engineering and Architecture, M.Arch Class of 2011 • Carlos F. Perez-Carro, B.A., U. Florida, MCRP • MSUD Class of 2012

Beijing

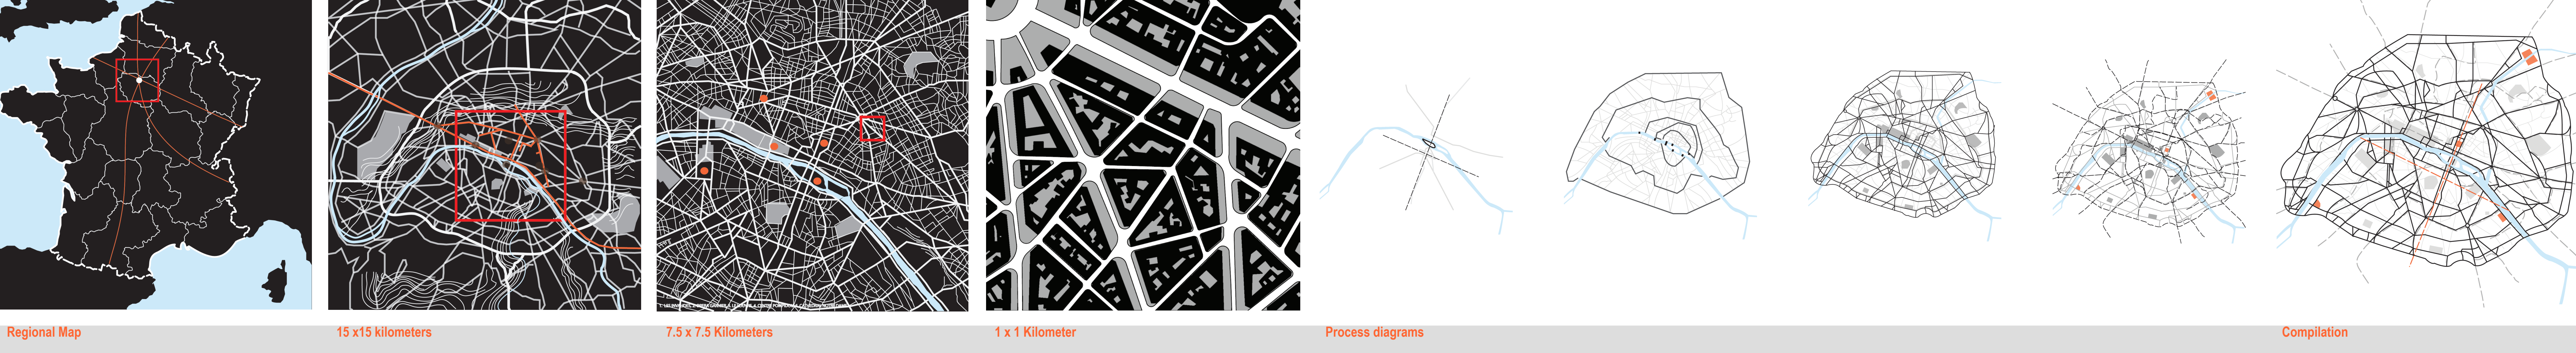

Amber Einarson, BS, Georgia Tech, M.Arch Class of 2011 • Sarah Ciccone, BA, U. Georgia, MCRP Pratt Institute, MS-UD Class of 2011

Berlin

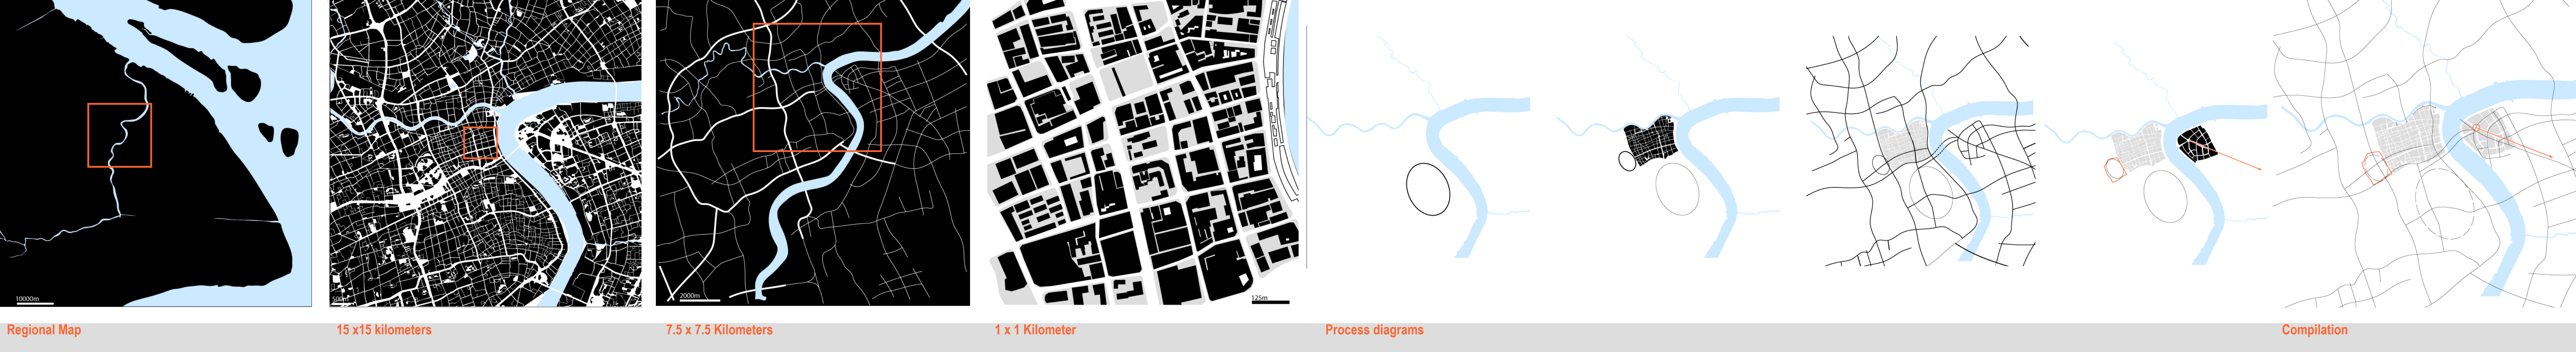

Holden C. Spahl, BA, U. Georgia, MCRP Georgia Tech, MS-UD Class of 2011 • Joshua Herndon, BBA, U. Georgia, MCRP Class of 2011

Paris

Ellen Fuson, BFA Washington U. in St. Louis, MARCH Class 2011 • Amanda Mooney, B.A., U. Georgia, MCRP and MS-UD Class of 2011

Shanghai

Kirsten Radomski, B.A., U. Georgia, MCRP Class of 2011 • Joshua Herndon, BBA, U. Georgia, MCRP Class of 2011