S.A. wine boycott divide's workers

By AARON DOYLE Review Staff Writer

Sidney and Brentwood liquor store employees are passionately divided on the issue of whether to handle South African wines.

The B.C. Government Employees Union asked its members last week to boycott the wines because of South Africa's apartheid policies. But some local workers are ignoring ch's Vancouver warehouse the request.

"I don't believe it's any business of ours . . . it's the business of our customers," said Sidney auxiliary clerk Lee Blow.

Blow, 34, said most employees oppose the boycott. "There is a pretty strong feeling from customers that people should have the choice themselves."

But another Sidney clerk, Fay Baxter, said "I don't think they've thought it out . . . I've said maybe in the next life you should come back as a black person in South Africa.

"I think it's terribly embarrassing that B.C. is the only province that doesn't (boycott the wines)."

While the wines continue to be sold in Sidney, employees at the Liquor Distribution Branrefuse to ship any more South African liquor. Blow estimates the Sidney stock will run out "in a week or two."

Brentwood employees were also still handling South African wines and sherries last

"We're not going to do anything until we hear from our head office," said a Brentwood employee, who asked not to be identified.

He said he didn't think the boycott would accomplish anything. "You'd have to ask some of the staunch union peo-ple downtown."

Union spokesman George Reamsbottom said six of the 14 greater Victoria stores pulled South African wines from their stores Sept. 2, the first day of the boycott.

BCGEU president John Shields said "Our union and our membership are strongly opposed to . . . the denial of basic human and worker's rights by the South African government." South Africa's 24 million black people are held voteless and under a harsh series of restrictions by a white minority of five million.

Emply Trident bldg. costly to maintain

By AARON DOYLE Review Staff Writer

Once upon a time, the Trident building was to be the workplace for 250 new jobs in Sidney.

But now, the multi-milliondollar building on airport land has sat empty for six years and still costs the BC Development Corporation well over $100,000 annually to maintain.

But BCDC still hopes a major manufacturer will one day set up in the Trident building on Galaran Road with a couple of hundred employees.

Ultramodern Trigull amphibian aircraft were supposed to be manufactured in the 75,000square-foot building. But the operation folded before a single plane was built, after sucking up about $7 million in federal and provincial government financing.

BCDC received a $2.9 million federal grant to construct the building in 1979. The BC government contributed another $1.7 million towards construction.

These days, BCDC's Doug McNaughton shows the empty Trident building to a handful of prospective buyers or tenants every month. But, he says, negotiations often seem to stall just before reaching a conclu-

"It suspect it's the Island," Huberts, 40, is a veterinarian said McNaughton. "They're major manufacturing facility featuring 11,000 square feet of office space, and a 64,000square-foot hangar area.

"There's no equipment but it's got an electrical system with enough power to run the whole town."

Interest has been shown by a number of manufacturers, including makers of trailers, boats and aircraft components. "We've also discouraged some companies, 's said McNaughton. "Small companies where we know it will break them. It will probably cost $400,000 a year to operate that building."

Local aviation enthusiasts would like to start a flying museum in the Trident building.

But McNaughton says "It would be a travesty to use it for that purpose."

Why is it so expensive to maintain? Sidney property taxes amount to $90,000 a year, plus ground rent to the federal ministry of transport and a property manager's salary.

But McNaughton says the building has advantages. He estimates it would cost twice as much to build today, and the facility could be ready almost immediately.

So while it may seem BCDC is stuck with a costly white elephant, McNaughton still hopes the Trident building will one day result in a major new industry locating in Sidney.

In the spring of 1985, he recalled, a movie company set up filming in the Brentwood area, AThey stopped business completely for a couple of days, blocking off roads and traffic."

Grass fires keep firefighters busy

Central Saanich fire chief Art Curry said firefighters were called out to battle a small bush fire in Centennial Pack believed started by youths smoking. It took firemen half an hour to control the burning, which covered a 10-foot square area.

Curry said it was fortunate someone noticed the fire and immediately reported it to the firehall.

Asked about the extreme conditions, Curry said he is hoping for rain today.

Sidney firefighters also had to put our some minor fires over the weekend.

A homemade smokehouse on Brethour Road became smokier than bargained for when coals started a small grass fire on Saturday, And on Sunday, a barbeque on Resthaven caused some anxious moments untilfirefighters were called in to cool it off.

Conditions are still extreme and all burning restrictions still apply until further notice.

Find solution to fair quandry

The Saanich Fall Fair is a venerable institution on the Peninsula and it shouldn't be taken for granted.

Not many areas have an agricultural fair where children, who don't have much hands-on contact with farm life, can enjoy the rural experience.

As society president Sylvia Hutt reports in the fair manual: "The fair has survived, even though finding itself, through no fault of its own, in very cramped and inadequate quarters far too small for the job to be done — the job of furthering the interests of agriculture."

The fair survives because of the dedication of scores of volunteers who work year-round to make the exhibition a success.

The North and South Saanich Agricultural Society, through its work, aims to promote the job of feeding people. A worthy endeavor.

Farmers have not had an easy time of it this year. Unstable spring and early summer weather resulted in many Peninsula farmers losing up to 50 per cent of their crops.

Whether the fair is a success or not is crucial to the society's ability to provide aid to those farmers experiencing difficulty.

The Saanich Fall Fair has proved itself for more than a century. Average attendance currently sits at 50,000, which is not insignificant.

While some events and displays might seem mundane to the city bred, it all serves a purpose in allowing the farmer to showcase his skills and livestock.

Society members believe the present grounds are not satisfactory, and are working towards a solution for next year.

Central Saanich council is accused of throwing up obstacles to stop the fair from moving to a new site. Some fair organizers complain bitterly, off the record, about "politics" and "personal vendettas" while council members refuse to publicly acknowledge a problem exists.

It's time both sides sat down and dispassionately found a viable answer to bring the fall fair back to its former glory.

Forcing Scout hall out of town

Editor:

As a taxpaying resident of Sidney, I am writing this letter to voice my objections with council's decision to tax the Boy Scout and Girl Guide Hall in Sidney at the corner of Third and Bevan Ave.

The Boy Scouts and Girl Guides' only source of revenue comes from bottle drives, Christmas tree sales and registrations. I believe any council member who voted to tax this organization, for the first time ever, should hang their heads in shame.

As other Guide and Scouting organizations in the surrounding areas are tax-exempt by their respective councils, I cannot fathom any logical reason for Sidney council's action, other than forcing the organiza-room for commercial ventures. and with this move who would gain?

Surely not the members and children of the guide and scout organizations.

As a portion of our annual tax base is recreation, where does this assessment go? Surely not all of it is spent on tennis courts, soccer fields and flower gardens.

Tax exemptions are a necessity for non-profit volunteer community organizations such as the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides, and yes, even Sanscha, so they can survive and provide a necessary service to our community.

I firmly believe Sidney council should review its line of thinking on granting exemption out of Sidney to make tions before it is too late, and these organizations in Sidney are forced to close their doors on our children.

Excellent articles on teen drug use

Editor:

Congratulations to Suzanne Inskip for the excellent articles on drug and alcohol usage among the kids of our area. I think it highly applaudable that the Review should take on this subject locally confirming through research what a lot of us have suspected for some Frankly, I think it a very sad situation and one which we as parents or elders should voice our strongest possible objections on.

I take little consolation in the statements made by police chiefs or the probation officer that we have "less of a problem than other B.C. communities" or the problem is no better or worse then it was 10 years ago." To me these are statements that prove these agencies haven't improved matters a damned bit.

I don't recall giving my assent to any thing but the harshest penalties for minors who break the law, even more so these days when our society is in such a state that we are in danger of economic collapse through our excessive indulgences and isolation from the real competitive world.

I recently was privileged to travel in the Far East: the booming economies and full employment of Singapore, Hong Kong, Korea and Japan really make one stop and ponder. Two of the countries have excellent education systems and in all of the countries, full discipline at schools is rigidly enforced leading to a generation of young adults mentally prepared and ready to work in this world. Here, I see the opposite occurring.

Completely stamping out this drug and alcohol use among minors would be a start in improving our prospects for the future.

When the premier of British Columbia says he wants to bring down the price of a glass of beer, so the working man can afford the stuff again, I know that an election is in the wind.

The first hint of an impending election came when Premier Vander Zalm told a meeting of British Columbia broadcaster that the pubs would probably stay open on Sundays after Expo closes.

But when he promised to tilt at the windmills of high beer prices, well, I just knew this was it. A fall election was certain. What a platform, Lower beer prices.

But there are actually better reasons to suspect that Vander Zalm won't shelve the election until next spring. His poplarity is greater than anyone would have expected. Fears that he might suffer the same fate as John Turner, who rushed into an election in the wake of the Liberal leadership convention euphoria, seem to be unfound-

The public clearly wants to like Vander Zahm. Whatever it takes to be popular, lie's got it. I mean, people stop him on the street to ask what they should do about garden pears.

AT THE LEGISLATURE HUBERT BEYER

The inescapable conclusion is that he can't possibly do better next spring. So, why wait?

By now, all constituencies should have had a call from David Poole, executive director of the Social Credit Party, instructing them to get on with their nominating meetings, another sign that Vander Zalm is gearing up for a fall elec-

The second or third week of October look like good bets, depending on whether he calls the election right after he caucus retreat in Prince George or a week later.

As for some admittedly premature speculation on the possible outcome of an election, it doesn't look too good for the NDP.

A friend of mine who is running for the Socred candidacy. in one of the 69 ridings (I also got NDP friends) is convinced that the New Democrats wills be lucky to get 20 seats.

At this point, I fear he's right. I say fear because I am extremely leery of governments with large majorities. They tend to be very arrogant and autocratic.

But I can't see how the NDP's Bob Skelly is going to hold off the Vander Zalm steamroller. He all but admitted himself that he can't win an election against Vander Zalm. At least, he said he couldn't compete with the man's charisma and charm. That's not the kind of thing a comes back from the Socred confident party leader is supposed to say, even if it's true.

Nor is Vander Zalm's charisma and charm the only thing that spells trouble for the NDP. Of far greater consequence is that in the few weeks he's been premier. Vander Zalm has been steering the Socreds away from the extreme right to the centre of the political spectrum where undecided voters are more likely to follow.

The Socreds' swing to the centre has been so pronounced that Iona Campagnolo, president of the Liberal Party of Canada, called Vander Zalm a Liberal premier.

As long as the Socreds looked like born-again right wingers, the NDP had a good chance of winning the next election. That chance, I'm afraid, is now gone;

The NDP will, of course, do everything it can to convince the voters that a mere change in leaders hasn't altered the basic position of the party.

It's a tactic that has worked well for the Socreds. When the NDP abandoned some of its more socialistic goals, the Socreds very successfully used the old saw of the leopard that is unable to change its spots. Dave Barrett was still wearing his same old red underwear. they said:

But in the case of Vander Zalm I don't think it will work. The pulbic seems to be very comfortable in its belief that the man isn't another Bill

All of which is very bad for the NDP. Not only will they have little chance of winning the election, but they may be routed by the smiling man who once quit politics in disgust and then came back to claim the job of premier.

One lost child is one too many

Editor:

As temporary Sidney residents it is interesting and instructive to see the community tackle its local problems. Recently you covered a local project called Operation Parenting which is attempting to address the important and evidently often overlooked problem of a lack of local foster families and the requisite community support necessary to deal with "problem teenagera."

We applaud this effort to find a local answer to a local need. Assleaders of the Canada World Youth group in Sidney we would like to clarify a point made in your article. The two youths involved in Operation Parenting, Lisa Burley and Edison Villacrez, have not been hired by this project as employees. They are working as volunteers with Operation Parenting for the duration of our program here.

This is important because although Canada World Youth is a private organization we receive much of our support from the Canadian Internation! Development Agency (CIDA), All 14 of our participants are involved in a volunteer capacity with local social service and agricultural programs.

We hope Sidney residents will respond enthusiastically to the efforts of Riley Hern and Operation Parenting. As a wise man once said "One lost child is one too many."

HUGH'S VIEWS HUGH NASH

Well, here we are in the second week of a new school season. Isn't it exciting?

The kids are over the first few days of politeness and have started to throw chalk around, teachers have forgotten they ever had holidays and are already popping tranquilizers, and parents are gearing up for the annual fall ritual called Meet The Teacher.

It has occurred to me that in these days of more and more working mums, an increasing number of dads will be flying solo on Meet The Teacher Night and a few hints on how to cope might be in order.

Independent education studies show that parent/teacher meetings botched by ill-prepared, weak-kneed fathers inflicted more psychological damage on children than all other environmental factors combined.

Too often fathers fail to understand that one of the most important things to establish at these meetings is dominant position. Who's in charge here, you or the teacher?

With this in mind I have prepared the following list of dos and don'ts for dads who, perhaps for the first time since staggering home from a grad dance, are about to enter one of those big rooms with the tiny seats and face . . . Teacher.

1. Be prepared with a list of questions to ask and points to get across before you leave home. Ask Mom for help if you're stuck. Nothing is more embarrassing than not having your homework done if Teacher asks.

2. Make sure you brush your teeth, comb your hair and wear a clean shirt. Check to make sure your fly is done up.

3. On the way to school don't dawdle. Don't follow bugs to their holes, stop to talk to other fathers, kick stones or scuff your shoes in the dirt.

4. Know the principal's first name and greet him on the way in — preferably in front of the teacher. Establishing a rapport with her boss lets the teacher know you actually function at a higher level than she does.

5. In the classroom, don't try and cram into one of those itty bitty seats. You'll not only look silly but will be in a subordinate position. Instead, hang one cheek on the side of a desk and riffle your notes.

6. Do not hand Teacher your business card unless you're sure you have more degrees than she does.

7. Don't put your hand up when you want to ask a question. Wait until she stops talking to take a breath and then jump in — after checking your notes.

8. Don't expect to get any information at this first meeting. It's designed to allow teacher and parent to size one another up, determine strengths and probe for weaknesses to be exploited later when the kid screws up.

9. Don't try slipping her any money under the desk hoping for preferential treatment. At least not at the first meeting. 10. Don't slouch. Sit up straight.

11. Don't knock last year's teacher. She or he may be this one's best friend.

12. Avoid making a pass even if she does look like Miss America. These chicks have heard them all and the last thing you need is a note in her copy book to "watch your knees with this one."

13. But do quiz her on what she graduated, from what institution, her marks, previous teaching experience, why she switched to this school, what was wrong with her previous school. Didn't she get along with her boss, fellow teachers, the parents? Is she a Commie?

14. Check you fly again. 15. Examine the classroom library. Flip through a few books making unintelligible grunts and murmurs as though suspending your condemnation until later.

16. Be sure and mention that your kid has never been any trouble at home or in previous classrooms. This helps to place the blame for any subsequent transgression squarely on this teacher's shoulders.

17. Don't wriggle about and ask to leave the room before the interview is over. You should have gone before you left

18. And for heaven's sake don't cry if you don't get your

19. When leaving, act cool. Saunter. Don't run, skip or sing "no more pencils, etc."

Damn it. I warned you twice to check you fly.

Look at alternatives for water tower

It is unfortunate that the Friends of John Dean Park are being viewed as unreasonable by some members of the water commission and an ex-CRD employee.

It must be remembered that provincial parks are not a land bank where lands are set aside to aid and abet development, but are indeed preserved for "the purposes of hiking and enjoyment of nature."

There are alternatives to siting a tower or towers in the park. Locating a tower adjacent to the existing one outside the park would provide emergency water for Sidney, enhance pressure in the Park Pacific development area and, according to a present CRD engineer, provide adequate

Granted, this location would not be suitable for the proposed developments on the south slopes of Mount Newton; therefore, if and when those development plans come to fruition, an additional tower should be built adjacent to that area

According to water commission chairman George Westwood during a televised discussion, there will be, in addition to the proposed one million gallon tower, more towers built on the park site in the future. Consequently, our suggestion of building the two towers is not unreasonable, and may in fact be more ecconomical in the long term.

If you believe McDonald's would be a good thing for Sidney, I have a bridge I'd like to sell you.

McDonald's claim to employ between 70 and 100 people. Is employing 70-100 people, parttime, at minimum wage worth destroying 20 to 30 small businesses that families have sunk their life savings into?

Does MacDonalds really think that people, after eating on the ferry, will stop at the Golden Arches? That they will be bored rather than pass the time eating so that they can stop for a Big Mac? Do they really think people from Victoria rushing to catch the ferry will leave early or give up their place

Computer classroom gives 'good scholars for dollars'

Editor:

Through the auspices of your paper may I offer my personal views to correct some of the misinformation that appeared in your editorial Don't Burn Books.

I wish there was a crystal ball that enabled school districts, for that matter all public and private institutions, to be sure of future funding. across Canada and the United States, as well as from the two corporations and they all will be welcome provided the educational climate is not disrupted.

We have agreed to the publication of pamphlets and materials that refer to the classroom. A pilot educational program that is not monitored, evaluated and recorded is of little use to the future of educa-

All Saanich students have had an active computer program for the past seven years. This regular computer program will continue at North Saanich School and all other schools. This new program is an addition to what other schools in the province will receive — a real educational opportunity.

Our district has an excellent scholastic record with Saanich students scoring above the provincial norm in all cross grade testing. Grade 12 graduates consistently achieve grades above the B.C. average. We are proud of our Saanich students and they deserve credit for their efforts and accomplishments.

The thought of burning any book is abhorrent to me. Books are the soul of a culture and any suggestion that they would be replaced by a computer is ludicrous.

It is correct that at this time, we do not know what the Classroom of the Future will do for the students, but if we don't try we never will.

In a district that has one of the strongest reading and writing programs in the province our greatest wish for the computers in the schools is to enhance the required sophistication in reading and writing skills that will enable our students to be knowledgeable, contributing and compassionate citizens of an interdependent world in the 21 century.

Movie concerns

Lewis said the production company had said they would be spending "all kinds of money locally. But they bought everything wholesale in Victoria."

Lewis was also personally inconvenienced when his telephone and cablevision were interupted. "They climbed up the pole and ripped my line off and hooked theirs in."

The movie company parked about 45 trailers along Brentwood roadways, he said. "They blocked people's driveways. If there: had been a fire, the firetruck could never have got down there."

The alderman expressed his concerns to council, after Bell Productions sought permission to film in Central Saanich last week. Council agreed to the request, provided the movie company purchased a business licence and posted a $500 refundable bond.

Central Saanich Police Sgt. Don Mann said no problems have been reported with the recent filming. "It appears they're very well organized as far as traffic control," he said. "We've had nothing but the best co-operation."

The film is directed by Gilbert Cates and produced by Dan Rissner. It stars Karen Allen, best known for her performances in Raiders of the Fall fair popular

The 118th Saanich Fall Fair was another success, and organizers are pleased because they expected a drop in business with Expo just over the water.

Attendance was 50,170 — down just 500 from last year, said vice-president Trevor Jones. And although the gate revenue dropped, the concession stands did better than ever.

Other agricultural fairs in the province lost 20 to 30 per cent of their gate to Expo this year, said Jones. "We did really well with the old fair to be down only one per cent."

The new events added to the program like the old artifacts competition were very popular and will be repeated, Jones added.

One of the main headaches of the fair is the lack of parking, he noted. Fair organizers hope to resolve the situation for next year.

Lost Ark and Star Man and Keith Carradine, previously seen in Nashville and The Long

The film's cast also includes Jeff Fahey, Dean Paul Martin and Dinah Manoff.

Locally, the film crew spent most of their time in the North Saanich area. Part of West Saanich Road near the Paquachin reserve at Cole Bay was sealed off to film various road sequences. Access to the set was closely guarded by Victoria City police.

The native community hall was transformed into an American bar — "Junior's Saloon" — complete with a mud wrestling banner, pool tables and a Harley Davidson hoisted high above a flashing n e o n s i g n . One Victoria man, hired on as an extra, said the bike owner was paid $125 a day for the use of his Harley. "They did a great job with the bar set. There was this beautiful bathroom — all brass and tile. I heard it cost $45,000 to build.

Because the film's story takes place in the U.S., he said, the production crew was fastidious in producing realism. "There was an American telephone booth outside, and everyone made sure no one left Canadian cigarettes lying around.

Shooting began Aug. 11 and will continue until Oct. 3, Bell public relations spokesman Rob Weinberger said, adding that the entire movie will be filmed on Vancouver Island including Victoria, Saanich, Duncan and Chemainus.

Sidney Hotel is the next site for the cast and crew. It will be closed Sept. 18 to accommodate the filming.

Sidney spelled wrong?

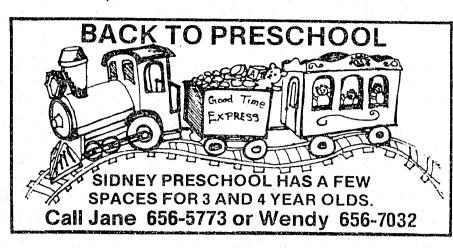

Hey everybody, we've been spelling Sidney's name wrong for quite a while.

A Sidney museum staff recently tracked down what she believes is the earliest reference to Sidney while browsing the provincial archives.

Apparently back in 1891, if you lived in Victoria, you heard what was going on in Sidney when a steamship came to town. To quote the report from a September, 1981 Daily Colonist: "Steamer North Star arrived last night from the town site of Sydney, North Saanich."

Whoops! Looks like a lot of signs have to be repainted. The brief report concluded "Great progress is being made with town improvements, and with the expected enterprises that are there to be inaugurated Sydney promises to be of considerable importance."

'Feel' participatory sculptures

MOWRY BADEN at work.

By AARON DOYLE Review Staff Writer

You start by thinking about a tiny leg movement.

From that motion, you create a sculpture in which the viewer sits inside a bulk feed tank and rotates on a stenographer's chair.

If you can create a work like this, assembled from $3,000 worth of old equipment and named for an 18th century French painter, you are a Central Saanich sculptor named Mowry Baden.

Baden's works involve the viewer physically. Another piece, featured in the Greater Victoria Art Gallery's 25-year retrospective, has the viewer pedalling on a bicycle, the power generated inflating and deflating a large plastic bag which covers an artificial tomato plant sitting in a shopping cart.

His "participatory sculptures" work on a kinetic level, giving the viewer something to feel as well as see.

The 49-year-old UVic visual arts professor has had his innovative work featured in Ottawa's National Gallery and New York's Museum of Modern Art, as well as galleries in Rome and Mexico, among others.

Sitting in his Wilkinson Road studio, sipping herbal tea, Baden is serene, almost deadpan, counterpoint to his sculptures. Eclectic music from UVic's CFUV radio station hovers in the conversational gaps.

His rotating stenographer's chair work was titled Claude Scratch after French painter Claude Lorraine. He says he expanded on the basic up-and-down foot motion a stenographer makes, pumping stenographer's apparatus. With Claude Scratch, each foot motion moves the chair almost imperceptibly, presenting a slightly different view from inside the vast

"It's an ordinary gesture, but if you put it in an extended time frame, the gesture has uniqueness.'

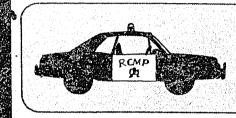

The California born sculptor, who now lives on West Saanich Road, says he likes to watch people interact with his work, sometimes filming their reactions.

But though he exhibits frequently lot, he "rarely" sells his pieces, living off his UVic salary. Outside his studio, an old B.C. Tel phone booth and a disassembled cement mixer wait, raw material for future works.

Why does he do it? "To stay off the street," he says, with just a hint of a smile.

MODERN TIMES

A 1923 Model T Ford fell prey to a car thief, 1986 model, at a Mainwaring Road home

A local antique car enthusiast had parts stolen for his prized classic, including two running boards and two spoked wheels.

FERRY THEFTS

Sidney RCMP, who deal with thefts on BC Ferries almost weekly, had two more complaints last week.

A pair of teak dining room chairs worth $300 were stolen from the back of a Saanichton resident's pickup truck Sept. 1.

And Sept. 4, a Calgary resident had a packsack stolen, containing $600 in jewelry and clothing.

A Central Saanich teenager was charged with impaired driving after she collided with a drainpipe at Dave's Chevron on Beacon Avenue Sept. 7.

DOWN THE DRAIN

Rash of break-ins

"We have had a little bit of a Sidney RCMP Staff Sgt. John Penz, after five more Sidney homes were targeted for burglary last week.

Noting that only small amounts of money were missing, he speculated they were work of local youths out to "replenish their spending money."

At least five other Sidney homes had been broken into the week before.

Houses on Allbay Road and Harbour Road were apparently entered by uninvited strangers Saturday evening, although only a small amount of cash was taken from one home.

On the afternoon on Sept. 3, a house on East Saanich Road was robbed of a small sum. The day before, a tent trailer was broken into on Harbour Road - the haul: just a flashlight.

And an Oakville Avenue resident reported an attempted burglary Sept. 1.

Flying home at 60 miles per hour

Pigeon racing has been called the poor man's horse racing, even by some bird fanciers but that is a misnomer.

Although the initial cost outlay is less than purchasing a thoroughbred, breeding and racing pigeons requires the same skill, dedication and time commitment.

Pigeon fanciers are a lowprofile group, placing bets among club members.

Central Saanich resident Dave Hill, past president of the Capital City Racing Pigeon Club, owns 100 birds. He said the club averages 20 members per year and for each race they will enter eight to 10 birds.

The key to successful racing, said Hill, is to build up a healthy stock of birds with strong bloodlines to ensure the necessary homing instincts.

The second factor is to keep the pigeons in peak physical condition at all times, concentrating on a well-balanced diet of grains, exercise and a clean loft.

developed to entice the bird home at top speed.

Hill, for example, uses a popular method called widowhood flying. By this system, fanciers only fly the cocks (male), which all have

"The only time the cocks see the hens is when they come in from a race," explained Hill. "So, he gets to know after a few times that when he goes out, his mate will be waiting for him in his nest."

Besides training and grooming the birds, fanciers nuture them from birth to their retire-

Good birds will be used as breeding stock when they've retired. And the others, Hill said, just won't return from a race if they are less healthy.

Average gestation period for a pigeon is 19 days and they are weaned at 21 days.

At two months of age, trainers begin familiarizing the squab with the carrier basket. And from there, the youngsters begin flying at increasingly longer distances.

Classed as young birds, they fly in this category for a year. Their season runs from May to September and the races generally start from points north on the Island such as Port Hardy, Alice Lake and Campbell River, which are from 200 to 300 miles away.

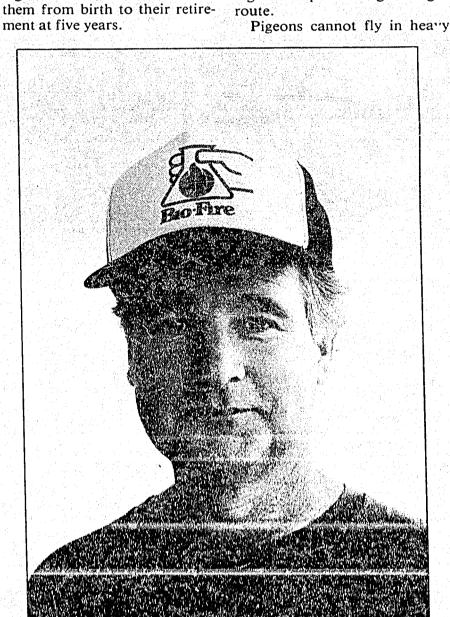

Hill said the young birds can handle this distance but no more. "They are still developing at this age and you don't want to burn them out in the first year, so you go easy with them.'

One- to five-year-olds race Incentives must also be from as far away as Edmonton - 600 miles away. Normally an overnight race, Hill said a few of the club's pigeons have returned the first day after flying 20 hours averaging 60 mph, exhausted or "flown down."

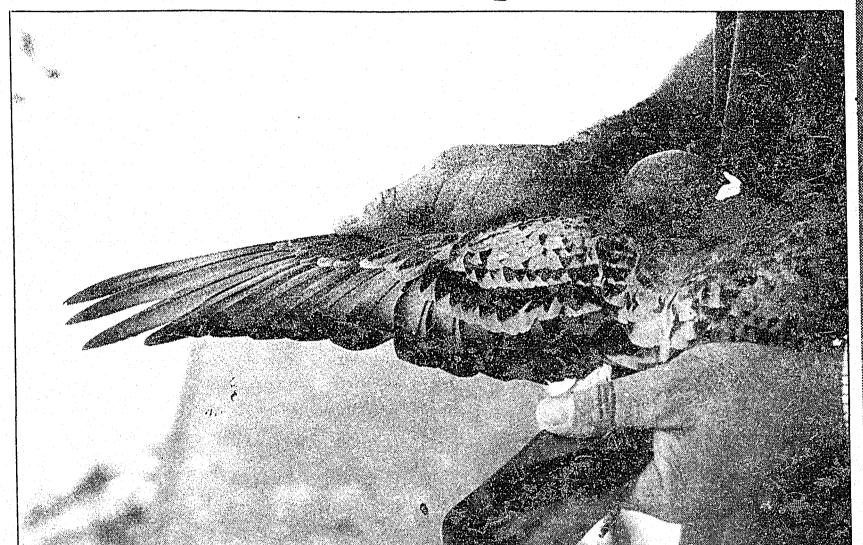

Trainers will give them a twoweek rest, but still have to keep the birds in good physical

The weather also plays an important role during races.

Club liberator Ken Walz, a Central Saanich building inspector, determines atmospheric conditions by checking with airports along the flight rain because their feathers become too heavy forcing the birds to land. Fog also poses a problem; fanciers are apt to lose a few birds who become disoriented.

The club has lost more birds than usual this year, said Hill, because of extremely bad weather in early summer. Pigeons are also falling prey to wild falcons, increasing in population on the Island, he noted.

Out of his 50 young birds, Hill lost 10 this summer, which is considerably higher than past

There's a large variety of breeding lines, he explained, although most fanciers prefer European stock. "We are always trying to upgrade our birds for better performance."

The racing pigeon is very different from the domestic "street" variety. Although similar in appearance, Hill says the latter's homing instincts have been neglected.

While many theories exist, the pigeon's homing ability remains a mystery.

"Most authorities believe it is a combination of the position of the sun in the sky and some magnetic influence on their brain enabling them to know the compass points," explained

"I feel it's those two factors and the experience of the birds in the racing areas. If you keep sending a pigeon to Kamloops, it gets to know exactly where it is going."

He also believes the stronger the incentive used to bring the bird home, the quicker the bird will return.

Racing pigeons were first used in the 19th century for carrying messages, but gained recognition during the two world wars for heroic flights over battlegrounds.

"In World Wars I and II they were used extensively for communication by the forces," said Hill. "There are lots of cases where they actually saved lives by giving messages to mobile troops.

Fanciers were assigned to train their birds to home to the loft in the mobile detachment. he said.

Now, the sport has been finetuned as breeders produce genetically stronger and faster birds.

Once the pigeon flies home to the loft, a rubber band is removed from the bird's leg and placed in a preset clock which stamps the time.

The flyers don't know how their birds fared until each clock is opened at the end of the race.

"Once the birds are home, you have to make sure they are happy, which means allowing them to be with their mate, feeding them and giving them a bath when they've cooled down," Hill noted.

For most club members, racing is more than a hobby. Like the racetrack atmosphere, pigeon fanciers enjoy the social aspect, the challenge of improving the breed, and the excitement of spotting the first bird racing home.

KEN WALZ, Central Saanich building inspector, transfers a racing pigeon from the carrier basket to the loft.

Organizer Brenda May said "with volunteer help, we added a few new fences and attracted riders from as far away as Kelowna." A crowd of 500 enjoyed the event.

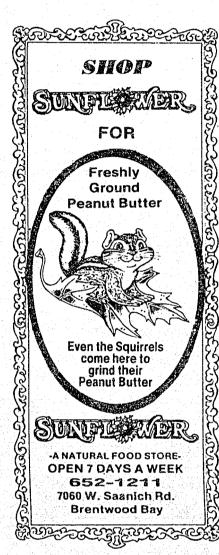

The 61 entrants competed in two categories — trained and pre-trained.

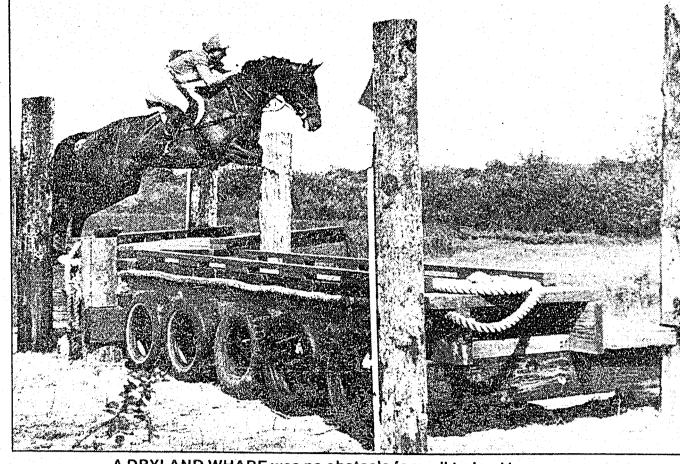

The competition was divided into three disciplines with dressage on Saturday morning, cross-country on Sunday morning and stadium jumping, Sunday afternoon.

In the pre-training division, the course was two-km long with jumps as high as 2'9". While in the training division, the course went to three km and jumps were 3'3".

One of the popular new jumps was the wharf, which provided a challenge to horses and rider over.

The bikers are coming.

The Seventh Annual Motorcycle Toy Run and Swap Meet is set for Sunday, Sept. 21.

Setting off at 10 a.m. from the Town and Country parking lot in Victoria, participants will strap toys onto their bikes before touring out to the Peninsula. Toys collected will be donated to the Christmas fund for needy families.

They are expected to arrive at Sanscha Hall around 11 a.m. for the swap meet and Show 'n Shine ride-in bike show.

All motorcyclists are welcome to take part, and the swap meet is open to the public from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Admission is free with a donation of a new toy.

Organizers suggest phoning 384-0333 to reserve a table for the swap meet as last year's event completely sold out.

Curtis notified council in August that the highways ministry had gone to tender for the overpass, with bids closing Aug. 15.

The Nanaimo developer, accused of ruining one of the loveliest views on the Island by building a dirt berm adjacent to Pat Bay Highway, has agreed to move it.

Timothy Peligren told the assistant engineer for the ministry of transportation and highways he would remove the berm once rain settles the earth.

Central Saanich became aware of the construction when Grace Macdonald of 2420 Meadowland Drive sent council a letter.

OVER THE GARDEN FENCE HELEN LANG 656-5918

Lots of phone calls this week, some of them happy, and some of them sad. Mrs. Gramms called to say she had grown early potatoes from certified seed, and they grew mightily. When she harvested these early spuds they looked beautiful, only three to a hill, but each of them weighing two pounds. As she said, "What does anyone alone need with two pound potatoes?" But, of course she was thrilled because they were so big and handsome.

Then she opened one and found the centre was hollow, and these inside walls covered with black, foul smelling matter: Oddly enough the leaves had been strong and healthy because "late blight" usually attacks the leaves first, only later showing up in the tubers. But my research suggest that "late blight" is the problem. She will have to destroy the foliage, discard the potatoes, change the location of next year's potato planting, and not put tomatoes in that area (since they, too, are subject to this horrible fungus disease.

Fortunately Mrs. Gramms also grew late potatoes, and these are not affected, but such a waste of her time and strength on the early ones. Enough to make one weep.

May Utting called to say that she also had an invasion of those elegant green and black, king-sized caterpillars mentioned last week. She took a couple of them to the Department of Agriculture where they informed her these are the caterpillar stage of the swallow-tailed butterfly. Seems wrong to kill them, but there is no doubt they eat a lot of foliage. I leave the decision to you.

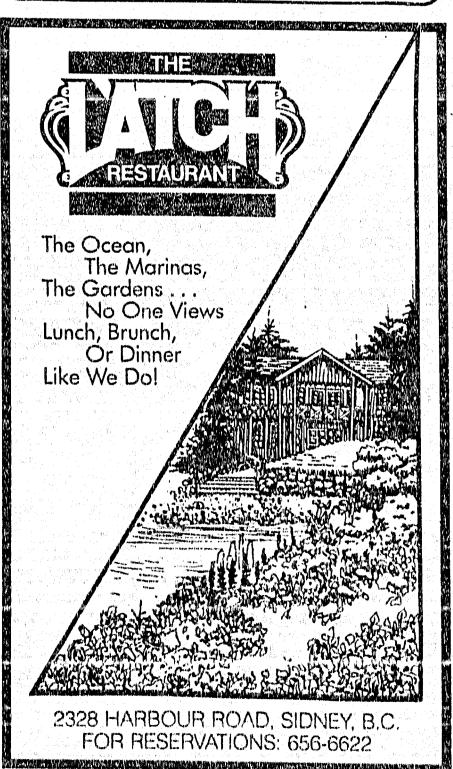

A nice call from Ross Fraser to offer some suggestions for organic gardeners. He has found he can control most pests by collecting a lot of them, mixing them with water and then "blending" them, then using the strained mixture in a sprayer to kill that particular pest. He may add a bit of water to his sprayer to thin the mix, but he swears it is absolutely deadly. He added (I could almost see the twinkle in his eyes when he said it) "Of course I had to buy the wife a new blender!"

To go into this a bit more fully: Mr Fraser says he had a poplar tree so full of aphids that the whole tree "looked like it was covered with crushed velvet" (a rather lyrical description for the lowly aphids!) He pulled the pest-covered leaves from several small branches, stuffed these in the blender, and covered them with water, and turned on the power. Presto! Aphid killer supreme. Shortly after his spraying he says the ground under the tree was covered with a pale green carpet . . . dead aphids. He also passed on the recipe for "rhubarb leaf" bug spray, particularly effective on carrots and radishes. Can't you just hear the chemical companies crying! He picks enough rhubarb leaves to fill the bottom third of a five-gallon pail, then covers the leaves with water to the top of the pail. This he lets steep for several days before using it, strained, as a spray. He says this brew gets a trifle "high" after a few days but what's a little 'smelliness' if the rhubarb tea does the trick?

Anna Mulholland called to ask what was destroying her gladiola, not only the foliage but damaging the flower spikes so badly they aren't opening properly. After some discussion we decided it had to be thrips, a minute flying creature only 1/16 of an inch long (so we aren't going to spot too many, even with "20-20" vision). The treatment is a bit drastic, but effective. Cut off and burn (do not compost!) all damaged foliage, and dig up the corms. Let them dry until the small rough circular scab (this year's bulb which is now spent) on the bottom of the large corm, can be pried off without damaging the large one. Now soak corms for three hours in a mixture of 60 ml household bleach in 14 litres of water. The way I figured this out is two tablespoons of bleach in 7 litres (I use a two litre milk carton to measure). Anyway, this treatment should guarantee clean bulbs to start off with next year.

A call from Art Wiens of Sidney who was properly horrified to find that his pear tree was flowering again, as well as bearing fruit. The silly thing obviously has its wires crossed somehow, but this does happen on many plants . . . sort of an off-season blossoming. He wondered if he should remove these blooms, and after considerable discussion we agreed it would probably be a sound idea. You take off late flowers on squash and tomato plants to promote growth of fruit already formed, so to encourage larger pears the same thing likely applies. More on this next week . . . the Wiens pear tree, I mean, plus a list of the earliest flowering bulbs for Ernie Wellwood, and anyone else interested.

Anyone with any extra greengages, would you call me please. A Mrs. Ross is rather anxious to get some for jam, and since I don't have her phone number, I know if she reads this she will be on the phone immediately to see if anyone called to say, "Yes, I have some to spare!"

Communicating with your pets

Dogs are good at expressing their emotions to people.

Dogs use their ears, tail, face, body and voice to let people know exactly how they feel. In fact, dogs can communicate the full range of human emotions ranging from anger and happiness to sadness.

A loving "hello" may be expressed by excited barking, jumping up, face-licking and tail wagging. Once the greeting is over your dog will let you know it wants to play by 'bowing' down with eyes open wide, mouth open, tongue out and barking while jumping backwards.

You might even notice the lips slightly pulled back because, believe it or not, even dogs can grin.

However, if the lips are drawn back, teeth are exposed and our dog growls, you know it is feeling angry. After a firm reprimand from you, your dog may break eye contact, lower its tail and ears and crouch back.

When disciplined, young pups will release urine as a submissive gesture. When your dog wants to show that it is feeling regret, it will roll onto its back exposing its belly.

Some actions by dogs are natural and dogs should not be phsyically punished for them. For example, chasing joggers, cars or cyclists is based on natural 'chase' instincts. Training rather than punishment will help stop this behavior.

Urinating to mark territory is also an instinctive canine behavior. After urinating many dogs scrape or paw at the ground. This is a visual signal left by dogs to mark territory.

A dog's ears are another important means of communication. If the ears are pointed forward the dog is on the alert while if they are held up the dog is concentrating on something. Ears flattened back means that the dog is angry.

Cats communicate in their own special manner.

It's important for people to recognize these signals in order to understand what a cat is saying. If your cat looks up at you. gives a quick flick of its ear or tail and then closes its eyes, don't be offended.

It's just your cat's way of saying that it likes you and feels comfortable in your presence.

Eye contact is an important aspect of cat communication since it establishes domination and subordination. The best way to discipline your cat is to maintain eye contact to assert your domination.

Usually, after being disciplined a cat will lick its paw and then rub its face with the paw. This is a sign of embarrassment very much like people straightening their hair or clothing when embarrassed.

When a cat is in good spirits it will walk with its tail up vertically and rub its lips and head against you or other objects. These rubbing actions release a special scent from glands on the cat's lips and forehead.

When a cat rubs its tail on furniture it is also leaving its scent behind. This allows the cat to leave its own familiar scent on objects so that it feels comfortable in its surroundings.

This scent cannot be smelled by humans.

Another way cats mark territory is by the release of urine, commonly called spraying. This can be eliminated by neutering or spaying your cat.

Clawing at carpets and furniture is just another form of territorial marking similar to spraying.

A purr usually means that your cat is happy and enjoying the attention it is receiving. While being patted, cats will make kneading movements with their paws and will sometimes drool.

This is a social behavior common to cats that reverts back to infantile behavior.

If your cat is frightened, it will arch its back, fluff the fur on its back and tail to give the illusion of greater size and it will hiss. A snarl with a show of sharp teeth means that it is time for you to leave the cat alone.

Other small signals that are important to notice are a swishing tail and the ears. A swishing tail means "go away" in cat language.

If the cat's ears are bent forward, it is curious. If they are held back to the sides, the cat is nervous, and if the ears are flattened back it means the cat is angry.

Never a dull moment with Kenny

By SUSAN McLEAN Review Staff-Writer

Every rodeo needs a clown, and the country music industry's answer to a yuck a minute is Kenny Shaw — performer extraordinaire.

The musician/comedian from Comox pulled his camperized school bus into town last week for two dynamite performances at the Sidney Travelodge.

And while his somewhat ribald pub show drew loud applause from the packed house, Shaw proved his talent doesn't stop at foot-stompin' country gems.

Backed by Steve Manski on banjo and bass, Shaw showed why he was chosen B.C. Country Music Association's Entertainer of the Year for 1985 and 1986.

Changing tempo to mold the mood of the audience, he mixed bar-room favorites with the classic sounds of country and rock — everything from Marty Robbins' medley to the infamous Rodeo Song and a Dueling Banjos rendition that brought the house down.

A trunk full of props and a bag full of one-liners added color to the hilarity. But it's Shaw's underlying diverse talent, professionalism and boundless energy that is responsible for his growing acclaim.

Out of the spotlight, he sheds the extrovert and becomes "down home Kenny," an obviously intelligent and sensitive individual.

An "ex-airforce brat." Shaw picked up some plywood and a bag of elastic bands at 10 years of age and built himself his first guitar. But it wasn't until 18 years later that he took up the music business

During the past few years he's played to enthusiastic audiences on cruise ships and in elementary schools. But a completely different routine. "They demand squeaky clean.'

Shaw's first album, Live in the Pub, was produced in 1983 and has sold more than 15,000 copies. A second album, he notes, "is long overdue." But this time, he's tailoring the songs for commercial viability and radio airplay.

"If you want to get into the mainstream, you have to have hot material, and that takes a long time to acquire."

He's also recently produced a 45 rpm showing the serious side of his nature — "a very schmultzy story" about a father and son discussing nuclear war with Silent Night playing in the background.

But for now, he's happy honing his talents and spending his off hours building a house with his wife Shirley and their three sons, Michael, Darren and Daniel, cutting firewood and enjoying fresh air and exercise.

Manski also enjoys the simple life when not in the footlights. From Rock Creek, B.C., just outside Osoyoos, he's taken up residency in a mountain cabin with no phone and no electricity.

After 15 years plucking his five-string banjo, Manski is now sought after to provide background music for numerous television and radio commercials.

The dynamic duo of Shaw and Manski climb back into their funky old bus to stash the fuzzy pink chaps and 100gallon hat into the back compartment. They honk the horn, wave with gusto and ride off into the afternoon sun.

SERVICE TO ALL MAKES

Thanks to two retired neighbors, Brentwood has two new horseshoe pitches.

Ron Duncan and Don Wolfe volunteered their time to build the pitches in Rom Knott Park off Wallace Drive. Now they are looking for other enthusiasts to join the new Central Saanich Horseshoe Club.

Both lifetime fans of the sport, they saw the need for a local playing area. Central Saanich recreation donated most of the wood, and after a couple of weeks work, Duncan and Wolfe created the four wood-covered sandpits 40 feet apart for two local pitches.

Since the pitch at Centennial Park shut down, horseshoe enthusiasts have had to travel into Victoria to play. But Duncan and Wolfe hope to generate enough local support to create a Central Saanich league.

"It's sociability, competition, fresh air," said Wolfe.

"You get a lot more throws than you do in bowling or golf," added Duncan. "And it doesn't take four or five hours to play."

A champion can throw the two-and-a-half pound horseshoes for ringers about 80 per cent of the time, said Dun-

Though Wolfe and Duncan have become a team through their horseshoes endeavors, they have fundamental differences. "He's from Alberta," explains Wolfe. "They don't allow leaners. They're a strange bunch out there.'

Harness racing winds up

Two local favorites were winners last weekend at Sandown raceway as the 1986 harness racing season concluded.

Lady Bayleaf, owned by Bill Eastgate, was first across the wir€ in Sunday's final preferred mares and fillies race, with a purse of $3,250.

And Land Strider, owned by Jim Heath, won the second division of the B.C. Sire Stakes for three-year-old colts and geldings, with a 1:58.2 mile, taking the biggest share of a $14,331 purse.

The race in the first division of the same category featured a rare dead heat, with Lanbro Tim and Shady Bar both posting a 1:59.1 time.

In the B.C. Sire Stakes for two-year-old colts and geldings, the first division winner was Duke of Hy, a full brother to the great Hy Class Minbar.

Doelcam Tony was the second division winner in that category.

In the newly created stakes division for four-year-old mares. Nazco Music was first. In the Harness Racing Improvement Fund stakes for four-yearold colts and geldings the popular Chilco Scotti was victorious.

In the B.C. Sire Stakes for three-year-old fillies, Ebony Blaze took the first division, while Disco Tina won the second.

Overall, Sandown attendance was down about six per cent for the 1986 harness racing season, with a total of 122,516. The annual handle was down four per cent, said a Sandown spokesman.

Meanwhile, the Island Harness Racing Booster Club voted Skip Along Guv the season's most popular horse. Skip Along Guv has been sold to Phil Tully of New York.

Canoeists win

Tasrtlip's Geronimo Canoe another victory at Expo on Club were invincible in three races in Vancouver on the Labor Day weekend.

The 11-man crew pulled their 400-pound war canoe to first place finishes in two events at Ambleside Park. Then they wound up their season with Labor Day.

But the club will have to put off racing in the Molokai to Oahu Channel Race until 1987, said club spokesman Caroline Morris. They had hoped to travel to Hawaii for the October event, but were unable to raise enough money.

Intensive training needed for tetrathlete's wins

Ian Soellner has no social life — and it doesn't bother him.

He doesn't like taking time off from his rigid training schedule, travelling to Vancouver every

Why has this 17-year-old given up everything except training and school?

Soellner, a dedicated pentathlete and tetrathlete, returned Aug. 31 from six weeks of competition in Europe and after a rest, will begin training for next year.

He spent two weeks prior to the championships training in Germany.

The World Pentathlon Championship, held in Italy, was good experience for Soellner, who finished 35th. He's happy about the placing, he says, considering he competed against the Eastern bloc countries.

IAN SOELLNER

But, the tetrathlon competitions in Scotland and England were more fun, said Soellner.

Scotland was a warm-up to the international meet in-Stoneleigh, an hour's drive from London. Soellner placed third individually and the team also won the bronze.

Meeting the Russian tetrathletes was one of the best parts of the competition, said Soellner. The Russians were impressed with Nike running shoes. One Canadian swapped his shoes for a camera lens.

Soellner will begin training for the 1987 international pentathlon championships in Korea.

But for the immediate future, the athlete has to concentrate on graduating from Parklands Secondary School.

National volleyball play a thrill

NATIONAL PLAYER Lara Melville demonstrates spiking as a pre-game warm-up.

Volleyball has received greater recognition as a national sport since the Canadian teams' superb performance at the 1984 Olympic Games, says national player Lara Melville.

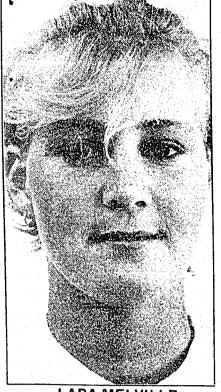

The Sidney resident recently returned from Puerto Rico where the Canadian juniors placed second to Cuba in their fiveteam zone - Noreca.

For Melville, 19, a second year physical education student at University of Victoria, competing on the national team was more challenging than at provincial level. This is the first year she has played for Canada.

And although the coaching schedule is tough — nine hours a day — the juniors only train as a team for 10 weeks in the summer.

"I am glad to have a rest," said Melville, "but I am looking forward to going back to it."

The next big competition for the Canadian women's teams is the 1987 championships in Seoul, Korea.

LARA MELVILLE

Selection begins at a tryout camp at Christmas.

Because of the demanding training schedule of volleyball, Melville does not have time for any other competition sport. But, she hopes to coach volleyball eventually.

Sparrow pitches

After a month off the mound, Sidney Hotel blasted its way to victory last weekend, winning a round-robin mixed fastball tournament.

On Saturday, Sidney beat Coachman Inn 9-4, then lost a 14-13 heartbreaker to Car Check. But they came back in the third game of the day to trounce the league champs Humboldt Street Blues 9-7.

Sunday's games saw Sidney take Oak Bay Guesthouse down to a 4-2 defeat, tromped Homebrewers 22-4 and squeeked a 8-7 win against Car Check in a nine-inning match-up.

Sidney Hotel's Joe Benning batted 682 and brought in seven runners; John Brown batted 647 with seven RBIs; Peter Termors batted 609 with 13 RBIs; and Shane Griffey batted 592 with 11 RBIs.
