Biographical Note

Benjamin Lawson Hooks was born in Memphis, Tennessee, on January 31, 1925, to Robert B. Hooks and Bessie White Hooks, the fifth of seven children. Hooks' father was a photographer and owned a photography studio, and his grandmother, Julia Britton Hooks was only the second American black woman to graduate from college in the United States, graduating from Berea College in Kentucky in 1874. Hooks' education took him to LeMoyne College in Memphis, Tennessee, from 1941 to 1943. Hooks was drafted into the Army in 1943, where he guarded Italian prisoners of war. Upon his discharge in 1946, Hooks decided to pursue a law degree; however at the time there were no law schools in Tennessee which would admit black students. Hooks went to Chicago to study at DePaul University where he completed his J.D. in 1948.

Hooks then returned to Memphis and quickly earned a local reputation as one of only two black lawyers practicing in Memphis. At the Shelby County fair, he met Frances Dancy, a 24-year-old science teacher. They were married in Memphis on March 20, 1951 and raised a daughter, Patricia.

In his youth, Hooks had felt called to the Christian ministry and despite his father's wishes, was ordained a Baptist minister and began to preach regularly at the Greater Middle Baptist Church in Memphis in 1956. He also became a pioneer in the NAACP-sponsored restaurant sit-ins and other boycotts of consumer items and services. He entered state politics, making unsuccessful bids for the state legislature in 1954 and for juvenile court judge in 1959 and 1963. Despite his losses, Hooks attracted not only black voters but liberal whites as well. In 1965, Tennessee governor Frank G. Clement appointed him to fill a vacancy in the Shelby County criminal court, becoming the first black criminal court judge in Tennessee history. The following year he won election to a full term in the office.

By the late 1960s, Hooks was spread thin as a judge, a businessman, a lawyer, minister and television personality. Hooks hosted and produced several local television shows, including a weekly half-hour program, Conversations in Black and White on station WMC-TV in Memphis. He had also appeared as a panelist on a broadcast of the program What is Your Faith? which aired on WREC-TV in Memphis.

Twice a month he flew to Detroit and preached at the Greater New Mount Moriah Baptist Church. He also made himself available to the NAACP as needed for civil rights protests and marches. Frances Hooks sacrificed her own career as teacher and guidance counselor to become her husband's assistant, secretary, advisor, and traveling companion.

Benjamin and Frances Hooks moved to Washington, D.C., in 1972, when President Richard Nixon appointed Hooks to the Federal Communications Commission, (FCC) making him the first ever black appointee. As a member of the FCC, Hooks addressed the lack of minority ownership of television and radio stations, the minority employment statistics for the broadcasting industry, and the image of blacks in the mass media. During his tenure on the Commission, Hooks actively promoted the employment of African Americans and other minorities in the broadcast industry as well as at the FCC offices. He also encouraged minority ownership of broadcast properties. Hooks supported the Equal Time provision and the Fairness Doctrine, both of which he believed were among the few avenues available to minorities for gaining access to the broadcast media.

Although he was a spokesman for the perspectives of Blacks, women and Latinos with respect to broadcasting policies, relations between Hooks and these groups were not always friendly. Two of his decisions while on the commission stand out as especially difficult for Hooks. The first was his vote to uphold the First Amendment and not censor a political candidate for the U.S. Senate in the Georgia primary. As part of his political campaign, senatorial candidate J. B. Stoner produced and aired television and radio spots that referred to African Americans as "niggers." A number of African American and other groups wanted the spots banned by the FCC. Hooks, however, felt that supporting freedom of speech was more important than banning the spots. In a New York Times interview he suggested that "even if it hurts sometimes, I'm a great believer in free speech and would never do anything to tamper with it." He argued that in the long run, banning the spots would prove more detrimental to Blacks and other groups, than allowing them to air.

The second major decision during his stint on the FCC involved broadcasters and the rules related to Equal Employment Opportunities (EEO). Prior to 1976 stations with five or more employees were required to file a statistical report, including the number of employees by race and gender, with the Commission. In 1976, the Commission proposed a change in this policy. Only those stations with a specific number of employees, higher than in the past, would be required to file a statistical report outlining the station's employees by race. However, the new policy also required an EEO program that would provide a strategy for increasing minority representation at the stations. Citizen's groups felt the FCC was easing its restrictions regarding minority hiring practices on smaller stations. They asked Commissioner Hooks not to support the new policy. Hooks, however, decided that the new rules would, overall, have a positive impact on the hiring of minorities and women and supported them except for the section no longer requiring stations with less than fifty employees to file EEO programs.

While Hooks served on the Commission broadcast ownership groups that included minorities were given preferential treatment by the FCC, an office of Equal Employment Opportunity was set up, and the employment of Blacks by the Federal Communications Commission offices increased. While Hooks was with the FCC, minority employment in broadcasting rose from three percent to fifteen percent.

On November 6, 1976, the 64-member board of directors of the NAACP elected Hooks executive director of the renowned civil rights organization. Founded in 1909 after a series of brutal lynchings in the South, the NAACP is the oldest and most prominent civil rights group in the United States. Hooks was determined to add to the enrollment and to raise money for the organization's severely depleted treasury, without changing the NAACP's goals or mandates.

Hooks oversaw the NAACP's positions on affirmative action, federal aid to cities, foreign relations with South Africa, and appointments to the Supreme Court, among others. As Hooks explained, "I wanted to play a continuing role in the evolution of freeing Blacks from the sting of racial prejudice and discrimination," and made it his goal to increase the membership and finances of the organization while preserving its original mission. Among the achievements of the NAACP under Hooks' leadership were gaining the Martin Luther King, Jr. Holiday, sanctions against South Africa, which was still in the grip of apartheid, strong fair-housing legislation, and the 1991 Voting Rights Bill. Hooks also championed African American inclusion in American corporate offices and continued to press for voter registration and participation, and launched ACT-SO, the Afro-Academic, Cultural, Technical, Scientific Olympics.

During Hooks' tenure, the NAACP worked towards eradicating homelessness, drug abuse, inadequate education, and neighborhood safety. Hooks lamented the rise of an intractable urban underclass and warned that the promise of jobs and economic independence for African Americans must be met soon.

In Hooks' early years he weathered some bitter storms with Margaret Bush Wilson, chair of the NAACP's board of directors. In 1983, Wilson summarily suspended Hooks after the two fought about organizational policy. Wilson accused Hooks of mismanagement, but the charges were never proven. A majority of the 64-member board backed Hooks, and despite the controversy he never officially left his post.

For his lifetime commitment to civil rights, Hooks received numerous awards, including honorary doctorates from Howard University, Wilberforce University, and Central State University, as well as the 1986 Spingarn Award, the NAACP's highest honor.

Hooks' achievements with the NAACP take on a special significance in view of the political conservatism that prevailed during his fifteen-year tenure as its head—a period when Ronald Reagan and George Bush were in the White House. Hooks vowed to keep the NAACP true to its progressive mission. Under Hooks' leadership, the NAACP refused to endorse the nomination of African American Clarence Thomas to the U.S. Supreme Court because Thomas's views were too conservative.

By the time Hooks retired from the NAACP in 1993, its membership had grown to over five hundred thousand people in over twenty-two hundred chapters across the United States. Hooks was gratified by the results of a 1992 survey in which the NAACP earned an 86 percent approval rating among those polled. The organization has worked hard to counter criticism that it is mired in the past and out of touch with African American youths.

Early in 1990, Hooks and his family were among the targets in a wave of bombings against civil rights leaders. Hooks visited the White House to discuss the escalating tensions between races with President Bush. Although he emerged from that meeting with the government's full support against racially motivated bomb attacks, Hooks continued to be critical of the administration's apparent lack of action concerning inner city poverty and lack of support for public education.

In February of 1992, at the age of 67, he announced his resignation from the NAACP. Following his departure, Hooks served as a senior vice president at the Chapman Company, a minority controlled brokerage and investment banking firm with offices in seven cities. He also taught at Fisk University in Nashville as a professor of social justice, and resumed preaching at Greater Middle Baptist Church. Dr. Benjamin Hooks is also a distinguished adjunct professor for the Political Science department at the University of Memphis.

In 1996, Hooks and the University of Memphis established the Benjamin L. Hooks Institute for Social Change. The Hooks Institute is a public policy research center supporting the urban research mission of the University of Memphis, and honoring Dr. Hooks' many years of leadership in the American Civil Rights Movement. The Institute works to advance understanding of the legacy of the American Civil Rights Movement – and of other movements for social justice – through teaching, research and community programs that emphasize social movements, race relations, strong communities, public education, effective public participation, and social and economic justice.

On March 24, 2001, Benjamin Hooks and Frances Hooks renewed their wedding vows for the third time, after nearly 50 years of marriage. The ceremony was held in the Greater Middle Baptist Church in Memphis.

Dr. Hooks died on April 15, 2010, at 85 years old. His funeral was held at Temple of Deliverance Church of God in Christ on April 21, 2010. Mrs. Hooks died on January 14, 2016, aged 88.

Scope and Contents

The personal and professional papers of Benjamin Lawson Hooks span the years 1948-2010, with the majority of the items concentrated in the years of his tenure at the NAACP from 1977-1992. The records are comprised of correspondence, memoranda, reports, membership records, press releases, newspaper clippings, programs, articles, speeches, minutes, financial records, church materials, awards, photographs, audio and video recordings. The collection is divided into two parts, which are further divided into series and sub-series.

Part I (Boxes 1-222) is comprised of five series.

Series I contains Religious Materials from Hooks' career as a Baptist minister, spanning 1949-1972. These materials comprise records from the two churches that Hooks pastored: Greater Middle Baptist Church in Memphis, TN; and Greater New Mount Moriah Baptist Church, in Detroit, MI, and include church bulletins, correspondence, event programs, and financial records, as well as programs from national Baptist conventions.

Series II consists of records from Hooks' years on the Federal Communications Commission, from 1972-1977, and contains correspondence, newspaper clippings, FCC dockets, intern applications, and speeches.

Series III pertains to Hooks' years as Executive Director of the NAACP, from 1977-1992, and comprises the bulk of materials in the collection. Series III is divided into six sub-series: General Activities; Administrative Files; Financial Materials; Legal Files; The Crisis Magazine Materials; Branch Files.

General Activities comprise calendars, clippings, conferences, correspondence, correspondence cogs, events, memoranda, people files, press releases, programs, reports, speeches, subject files, travel documents, and other materials. The General Activities subseries provides information regarding the policies and activities of the NAACP under the leadership of Hooks. The calendars provide schedules by year of Hooks' travel, speaking engagements, and conference schedules. The newspaper clippings contain articles about Hooks, the NAACP, or other subjects of interest to Hooks at the time. The clippings files include a small number of letters to the editor written by Hooks himself. The Conference materials pertain to the NAACP's Annual Convention, including planning memos, programs, speeches, and ephemera. The Correspondence files are perhaps the largest grouping in the collection, and comprise 57 linear feet of incoming and outgoing correspondence, including letters from Presidents George H.W. Bush, Bill Clinton, and George W. Bush, as well as members of Congress and the Supreme Court. The correspondence files also contain help requests sent to the NAACP, (some materials may be restricted), as well as constituent opinion letters, and occasionally hate mail. The correspondence logs provide an account by date of incoming mail received and whether or not a response was sent. The events files contain programs and planning materials for NAACP events and other activities which Hooks participated in. The memoranda files contain NAACP memoranda by year, mostly memoranda sent by Hooks to his staff members. NAACP press releases are arranged by year and document NAACP activities, programs, and political positions. The General Activities series also includes materials pertaining to NAACP programs and initiatives, such as the National Economic Development and Incubator Projects of the 1980s, the National Housing Development Corporation, and youth and college programming. The reports files contain working drafts and final copies of NAACP branch and program reports, as well as executive and annual reports for the organization as a whole. The speech files contain speeches given by Hooks, arranged by year, as well as Hooks' speech research files. The people files and subject files contain additional research files, including materials on affirmative action, South Africa and the NAACP's efforts to end apartheid, racism in sports, and the Rodney King trial, among others. The subject files contain clippings, memoranda, and press releases.

Administrative Files comprise Board of Trustees materials, as well as personnel and staff files. The Board of Trustees materials include meeting agendas, memoranda, minutes, and miscellaneous. The Board of Trustees materials also include documents regarding Hooks' suspension by the chairwoman of the NAACP, Margaret Bush Wilson in 1983. The personnel files contain resumes and job applications sent to Hooks, as well as NAACP employee manuals and job descriptions. (Some materials may be restricted.) The staff files contain memoranda and materials pertaining to individual staff members at the NAACP.

Financial Materials include NAACP budgets, as well as correspondence and memoranda from the Gil Jonas Company, the consulting and fundraising firm for the NAACP. It also includes fundraising activities, such as Radiothon and Christmas Seals campaigns.

Legal Files contain legal help requests sent to Hooks and the NAACP (some materials may be restricted) as well as records of court cases which the NAACP was involved with.

The Crisis Magazine Materials include correspondence, memoranda, page proofs, and other materials relating to the publication of The Crisis, including a full run of the magazine while Hooks served as publisher, which all contain publisher's notes written by Hooks, and often include photographs and essays regarding Hooks as well.

NAACP Branch Files are divided by region: Region I (the West Coast) Region II (New England and the Mid-Atlantic States), Region III (the Midwest), Region IV (the Plains States and Rocky Mountains), Region V (the South), Region VI (the Southwest) and Region VII (Washington DC and surrounding states). The Branch files contain membership lists, event programs, and state conference materials.

Series IV pertains to Hooks' activity outside of his professional life, including his involvement in civic and fraternal organizations, and retirement activities. Hooks served as Supreme Chancellor of the Order of Knights of Pythias, an international, non-sectarian fraternal order established in 1864. Series IV also contains materials regarding the founding of the Benjamin L. Hooks Institute for Social Change at the University of Memphis, in 1996.

Series V comprises materials pertaining to Hooks' wife and secretary, Frances Dancy Hooks, and includes correspondence, speeches, and the files of organizations that she was involved with, such as Children With Learning Disabilities. Series V also contains documents regarding the 1989 Miss America Pageant, for which she served as judge.

Part II (Boxes 223-401) contains additions to the collection and follows the same format as Part I.

Part II is comprised of Series VI-IX: Religious Materials; FCC Materials, NAACP Materials, and Publications. Series VIII: NAACP Materials, is further divided into the following subseries: General Activities; Administrative Files; Financial Materials; Legal Files; The Crisis Magazine Materials; and Branch Files. Part II also contains Photographs; Sound and Film Recordings; Oversize Materials; and Plaques and Awards.
