FBI'S TEN MOST WANTED FUGITIVES

60th
Anniversary

Message From the Director

For sixty years, the FBI has sought the public's assistance in a special way through one of our most effective and longest running publicity programs—the “Ten Most Wanted Fugitives” list. In 1949, reporter James Donovan asked the FBI to identify the “toughest guys” we were investigating at the time. We provided him with photos of ten dangerous fugitives, which he then published on the front page of The Washington Daily News.

The “Top Ten” list was extremely popular at the time and several fugitives were captured as a result. During the following year, the FBI formalized its “Ten Most Wanted Fugitives” publicity program, which, since 1950, has led to the location of more than 460 of our nation's most dangerous criminals.

Through the publication of fugitive information in various outlets, beginning with newspapers and magazines, to now using the Internet, television, social media, and digital billboards across the country, the FBI continues to seek public assistance in locating wanted fugitives. We recognize the unique ability of the news media to cast a wider net within communities here and abroad. The FBI can send agents to visit a thousand homes to find a witness, but the media can visit a million homes in an instant.

The FBI tracks every possible lead in its search for dangerous fugitives, but we could not have been as successful without citizens reporting tips to us and to our law enforcement partners. The FBI's “Top Ten” program celebrates not only an FBI success story, but emphasizes the need for citizen cooperation in the fight against crime.

The “Ten Most Wanted Fugitives” program tracks the evolution of the crime problem in America. While the list began with bank robbers and murder suspects fleeing state jurisdiction, it has evolved into a search for major organized crime figures, serial killers, domestic and international terrorists, cyber criminals, and white collar criminals. During this last decade, the list has illustrated the international scope of crime, as well as the importance of strong global partnerships in the search for terrorists, sexual predators, human traffickers, and other violent criminals who pose a significant danger to all.

The landscape in which we operate and the technology we use will continue to change. The threats we face as citizens will become more diverse and dangerous. But what will not change is the hard work and integrity of dedicated FBI employees and our commitment to protecting U.S. citizens both at home and abroad.

“The FBI's ‘Top Ten’ program celebrates not only an FBI success story, but emphasizes the need for citizen cooperation in the fight against crime.”

FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" Program

THE BEGINNING

On February 7, 1949, an article entitled FBI's Most Wanted Fugitives Named appeared in The Washington Daily News. A United Press International reporter contacted the Federal Bureau of Investigation and asked for the names and descriptions of the "toughest guys" the FBI wanted to capture. In hopes the publicity would lead to arrests, the FBI listed the names of ten fugitives it considered to be the most potentially dangerous. The story generated so much publicity and public appeal, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover permanently implemented the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" program a year later on March 14, 1950.

This "Top Ten" program relied heavily on the nation's news media. Recognizing the need for public assistance in locating fugitives, the "Top Ten" program was designed to publicize particularly dangerous fugitives who might not otherwise merit nationwide attention. And it worked! Citizen cooperation led to the arrest of nine of the first 20 "Top Tennes." This included the very first "Top Tennes", Thomas Holden, who was arrested after a citizen recognized his photograph in an Oregon newspaper.

TODAY

Gone are the days when "Top Ten" posters could be found in post offices. Since 1996, "Top Ten" posters have appeared on the FBI's Internet site, www.fbi.gov, allowing the FBI to extend its reach across domestic and international borders and obtain worldwide public assistance tracking these fugitives. Traditional media outlets, such as radio programs, television shows, and printed publications provide additional publicity for the fugitives on the list.

However, with the increased use of electronic and digital technology, the FBI has turned to some nontraditional and cutting-edge techniques to publicize the fugitives on the "Top Ten" list. Digital outdoor billboards appearing throughout the United States now feature images of these individuals. The FBI also has a Facebook page and a Twitter account where friends and followers can instantly receive information about the latest fugitives on the list. The weekly Wanted by the FBI podcast, FBI widgets, and a cell phone application all allow the public to download the latest fugitive information at the touch of a button.

As technology advances, the FBI intends to keep pace and continue using it as much as possible to profile fugitives and engage the public's help in locating them.

THE PROGRAM

Since its inception, 494 fugitives have appeared on the "Top Ten" list and 463 have been located. Not all fugitives have been arrested; some have surrendered peacefully, others have been found deceased, had their federal process dismissed, or were removed from the list because they no longer fit "Top Ten" criteria. But just as the priorities of the FBI have changed, so has the makeup of the "Top Ten" list. Through the 1950s, the list was primarily comprised of bank robbers, burglars, and car thieves. During the turbulent 1960s, the list reflected the revolutionaries of the time. Destruction of government property, sabotage, and kidnapping dominated the list. In the 1970s, with the FBI's concentration on organized crime and terrorism, the "Top Ten" included many fugitives with organized crime ties or links to terrorist groups. In the 1980s and 1990s, the list included sexual predators, international terrorists, and drug traffickers. This emphasis, along with crimes against children, white collar crime, and gang violence, continues today.

There are two primary criteria used to determine who should be placed on the list. First, the fugitive must be a particularly dangerous menace to society and/or have a lengthy record of committing serious crimes. Second, the FBI must believe nationwide publicity will assist in apprehending the fugitive.

Many FBI offices are involved in selecting the fugitives who will make the "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list. The Criminal Investigative Division (CID) at FBI Headquarters contacts all 56 field offices in an effort to solicit the most dangerous fugitives for consideration. CID Supervisory Special Agents and personnel from the Office of Public Affairs evaluate the nominees received from the field and select the "best" candidate. The candidate is then forwarded to the Assistant Director of the CID for his/her approval and then to the FBI's Director for final selection.

Unless a "Top Tenner" is captured, found dead, or surrenders, "Top Tennes" are only removed from the list when they meet one of two conditions. First, the federal process pending against the individual is dismissed. Second, they no longer fit "Top Ten" criteria. When a fugitive is removed from the list, another candidate is added.

A 20-YEAR STUDY OF THE FBI'S "TEN MOST WANTED FUGITIVES" PROGRAM 1989 - 2009

The theory behind the "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" program is simple: the more people that know your face, the harder it is to hide. Engaging the public in the hunt for the nation's most dangerous criminals by adding thousands of eyes to the search can be a valuable tool to investigators. With Agents following their trail, and a vigilant public awaiting them at every gas station and grocery store, the fugitive feels squeezed from every angle. Nine of the first 20 "Top Tennes" were arrested due to citizen cooperation. As the program has grown and matured, its success has continued. Nearly 94 percent of the fugitives that have been placed on the "Top Ten" list have been apprehended or located (463 of 494); approximately one-third of them a result of citizen cooperation.

When the program was born, fighting crime was the FBI's primary business, and the weight of the organization was dedicated to solving crimes and arresting criminals; finding fugitives played a vital part. But things have changed. Counterterrorism, counterintelligence, and cyber crimes have taken on more prominence and a greater share of FBI resources. Our criminal investigative responsibilities have changed as well, with higher priorities placed on public corruption, white collar crimes, civil rights, and gangs.

In response to this organizational shift in priorities, the "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" program has evolved as well. With fewer resources devoted to capturing fugitives, the role of the public has become even more important. To expand the public's exposure to the fugitives, the FBI has turned to technology and unique media partnerships. "Top Ten Fugitive" posters moved from the post office to the Internet, where they are viewed by up to three million people a month. A variety of new media platforms, including television programs and digital billboards, are now used to keep fugitive faces in the public spotlight. Plus, in the last couple years the FBI has gone viral, publicizing "Top Tennes" through widgets, Facebook, Twitter, podcasts, and on YouTube.

The following study takes a look at the last 20 years of the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list. How has the program changed since its inception? What crimes are featured on the list? How long do the fugitives remain on the run before being arrested? How has the program survived despite the organization's shift from being primarily a law enforcement organization to becoming a hybrid law enforcement and intelligence agency? Has "new media" contributed to the apprehension of these dangerous criminals? To answer these questions, this study looks at the 72 fugitives that have been placed on the list since 1989.

How the FBI Gets Its Men and Women

The standard candidate for addition to the “Top Ten” list has changed as the FBI’s priorities have changed. The original “Top Ten” list was comprised entirely of murderers, bank robbers, and escaped prisoners. The current list, while it still includes several murderers, an escaped convict and a bank robber, also includes organized crime leaders and an international terrorist. A review of crimes for which the previous 20 years’ worth of “Top Ten Fugitives” have been wanted illustrates the expanded scope of FBI responsibility.

Figure 1.1 shows that, not unexpectedly, the predominant crime category remains murder. The act of murder alone is rarely justification enough to be placed on the list. Other factors come into play, including the number of victims, their relationship to the killer, and the motive for the attack. To better understand which types of murders have resulted in placement on the “Top Ten” list over the past 20 years,

TODAY’S “TOP TEN” LIST MORE LIKELY TO INCLUDE TERRORISTS, ORGANIZED CRIME FIGURES, AND CHILD PREDATORS

Figure 1.2 breaks the murder category into a handful of distinct sub-categories. The two most common types of murderers to appear on the list involve family-member or domestic victims and killings with multiple victims. Other common crimes landing someone on the list include the killing of law enforcement officers, and other violent criminal acts, such as kidnapping or armed robbery, that escalate into murder.

In the last 20 years, a total of 72 fugitives have been added to the list. This compares with 422 fugitives during the first 39 years of the program. However, a review of the overall “Top Ten” statistics reveals that the yearly “located” numbers have been roughly consistent since 1970. The majority of “Top Ten” captures appears to have occurred within a couple short time spans. In a five-year span between 1951 and 1955, a total of 76 fugitives were apprehended or killed; a total of 105 were located during a similar five-year span between 1964 and 1968.

“TOP TENNERS” CAN’T HIDE FOR LONG

A “Top Tenner’s” odds of a long life on the run are not promising. Figure 2.1 breaks down the amount of time fugitives (other than current Top Tenners) have spent on the list. Nearly 60 percent of “Top Tenners” were caught within a year of being placed on the list, with more than half of those fugitives being apprehended within a month of being placed on the list.

Another interesting way of viewing the “Top Ten” list is by looking at where the fugitives were found. Did the fugitives attempt to use local knowledge and support structures to evade arrest, or did they try to establish a new life and a new identity far from the scene of the crime? Figure 3.1 shows where the fugitives were located in comparison to where the crime was committed.

MANY

While many “Top Tenners” apparently chose to stay close (one-in-six fugitives never left the city), two-thirds were eventually apprehended far from the location of their crime. In fact, more than 40 percent of “Top Ten” fugitives over the past 20 years have been apprehended outside of the United States.

How the FBI Gets Its Men and Women

Figure 3.2 reveals the destinations of choice for fugitives that have opted to flee the country in a failed attempt to avoid the FBI's grasp. The vast majority fled south, mostly to Mexico, but several went further south to South America. Three international terrorists and a Pakistani murder fugitive all sought refuge near their home countries in the Middle East.

Finally, perhaps the most important aspect of this analysis is how the fugitives were caught. As explained previously, the rationale for the "Top Ten" list is that increased publicity engages the public, and with it thousands of additional eyes, in the search for a dangerous fugitive. The publicity is not intended to replace law enforcement investigative activity, but to support and complement their investigative efforts: combining a vigilant public with determined investigators. Accordingly, the success of the program can best be measured through an analysis of how a fugitive is captured.

PUBLICITY

Figure 4.1, provides this information for the past 20 years' worth of captures. Historically, almost one-third of "Top Ten Fugitive" cases have been solved as a result of citizen cooperation (152 out of 463). In the past 20 years, however, that ratio has increased significantly. As the chart demonstrates, nearly 40 percent of the fugitive apprehensions came as a direct result of investigative publicity, with most of the rest coming through law enforcement efforts. With FBI resources being diverted away from fugitive apprehension, it becomes more important for publicity to fill in the gaps.

How the FBI Gets Its Men and Women

Furthermore, it should be noted that a fully accurate number is difficult to determine. Many successful captures do not fit neatly into a single category; often those that are chronicled as law enforcement efforts owe a significant debt to publicity as well.

Consider the example of Rafael Resendez-Ramirez, the railway serial killer. Resendez-Ramirez was identified as the killer through solid investigative work, and surrendered after negotiation with a family member; but most investigators credit intense publicity for forcing Resendez-Ramirez to end his killing spree and go into deep hiding in Mexico. Resendez-Ramirez is classified in the chart above as a “surrender,” but clearly law enforcement and publicity each played a vital role. Similar stories could be told of many of the other arrests. Accordingly, investigative publicity indirectly contributes to a far greater share of apprehensions than is captured statistically.

The “Ten Most Wanted Fugitives” program uses a wide variety of media avenues to put fugitive faces in front of the public. In addition to traditional outlets such as television news, newspapers, and wanted posters, investigative publicity targets unconventional avenues as well, including digital billboards, foreign language outlets, and television crime shows. Even the Internet, probably conventional by current standards, would have been considered unconventional during much of this study’s timeframe. Figure 4.2 identifies the specific publicity outlets that directly led to the arrest of a “Top Ten Fugitive.”

As you can see from the graph, the Fox TV show America’s Most Wanted is responsible for the most fugitive apprehensions. Two fugitives were located after being profiled on the television program Unsolved Mysteries, before it left network television in 1999.

Two more “Top Ten” fugitives were apprehended after citizens viewed them on the FBI webpage. Another fugitive was arrested after being profiled on a Spanish-language program airing on Azteca America TV.

How the FBI Gets Its Men and Women

The purpose of this brief analysis was to examine the past 20 years of the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" program, and how it has evolved at a time when the Bureau's organizational priorities have grown and shifted to a larger national security focus, with less resources devoted to catching fugitives. Specifically, the analysis looked at the types of crimes for which "Top Ten" fugitives are wanted, how far from the scene of the crime they were when they were located, and the major factors that led to their capture.

The pool of eligible crimes for inclusion on the list has evolved as the FBI's investigative responsibilities have broadened. What was once an exclusive list of bank robbers, escaped convicts, and murderers now includes additional crime categories such as terrorism, crimes against children, and organized crime.

During this study's range, 1989 - 2009, more than 60 percent of fugitives on the list were apprehended within the first year. The vast majority of fugitives were eventually arrested far from the location where their crime was committed. In fact, more than 40 percent of "Top Ten Fugitives" in the past 20 years have been located outside of the United States. Most of these international arrests have occurred in Mexico.

The goal of the "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" program is to leverage increased publicity as a complement to law enforcement investigation. At a time when organizational priorities are pulling resources away from fugitive apprehension, the role of publicity becomes even more critical. Fortunately, according to this standard, the "Top Ten" program is succeeding. Over the past 20 years, the percentage of "Top Tanners" captured as a direct result of citizen cooperation has increased from an historical average of 30 percent to nearly 40 percent. This increase is likely attributable to the use of previously unconventional media outlets, including the Internet, television crime shows, and foreign language outlets.

The "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" program is the standard bearer in the hunt for fugitives. To continue the success of the program, investigative publicity must continue to play a heightened role in putting fugitives' faces in front of the public. To accomplish this goal, a variety of new media avenues continue to be explored, including a national digital billboard campaign, expanded outreach to foreign media, and continued exploration of social media outlets. Keeping the "Top Ten" program relevant and successful in a changing world and an evolving FBI is a challenge, but it is a challenge well worth the effort.

CONCLUSION

Between 1989 - 2009 a total of 67 "Top Tanners" were located.

Within the past 20 years, more than 60% of fugitives on the "Top Ten" list were apprehended within the first year.

Over the last 20 years, the percentage of "Top Tanners" captured as a direct result of citizen cooperation increased from a historical average of 30% to nearly 40%.

Project Pin Point

Project Pin Point (PPP) is a geo-spatial intelligence tool developed in 2004 by a Special Agent on the FBI's Violent Crimes Task Force in Philadelphia. The tool was initially intended for fugitive apprehension, but evolved to include historical cell site analysis, informant development, and targeting capabilities for intelligence-related functions. It is now used by most FBI field offices.

A notable success story for Project Pin Point came in July 2007, when four people were gunned down inside the crowded Abay Wheeler Bar in southwest Philadelphia after an argument turned into a shooting rampage. When police arrived, no witnesses came forward to tell what happened. Using PPP as a means to develop intelligence (information) and locate people who may have witnessed the murders, members of the Violent Crime Squad were able to target and find witnesses, recover the murder weapon, and ultimately identify and arrest the gunman in a matter of days.

It works like this. PPP uses numerous data set layers, some of which include arrest warrants, crime and incident locations, registered sex offender addresses, and cellular telephone tower grid coordinates. These data sets are then overlaid onto a basic mapping software platform, with the different data sets being represented by colored icons. The result is a clearly understandable visual display of crime data and information of interest to the FBI investigation.

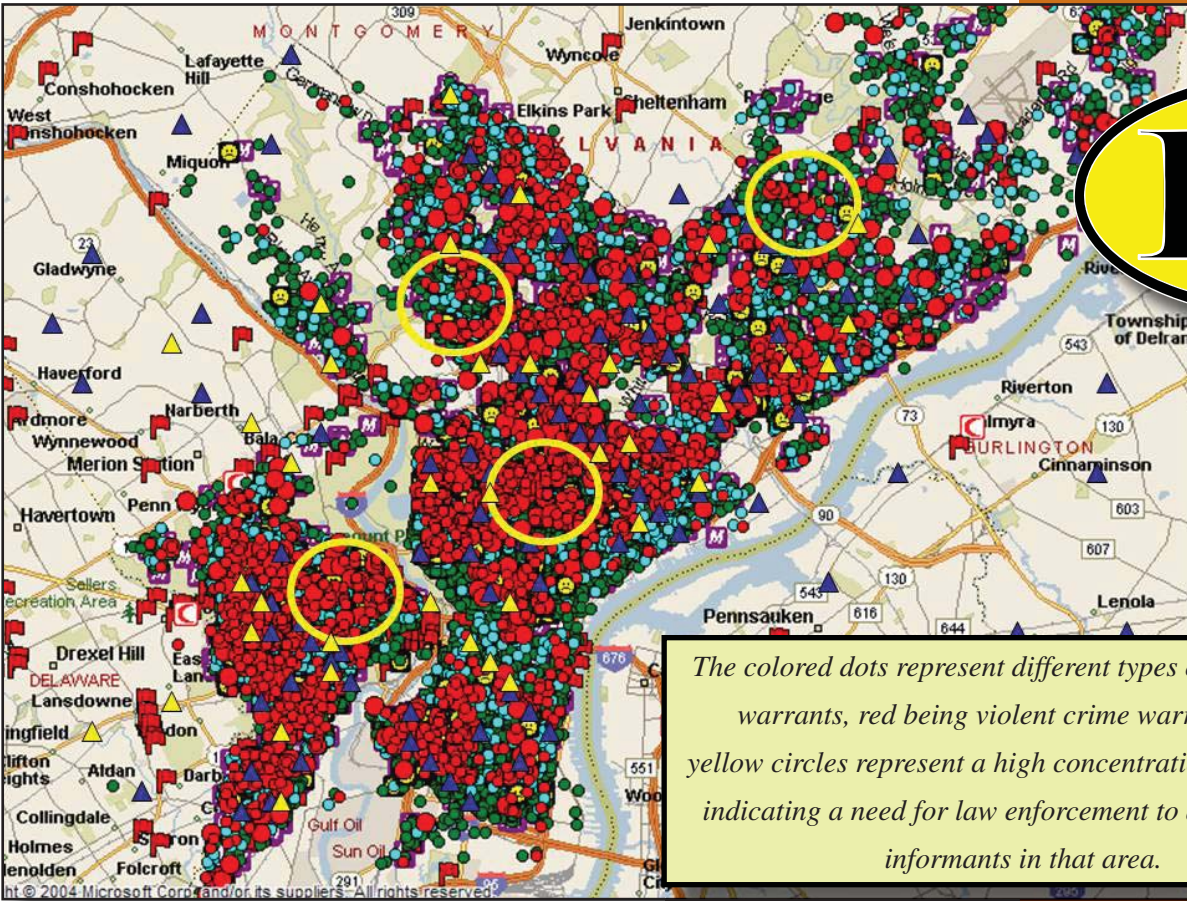

Map depicting radius around Abay Wheeler Bar

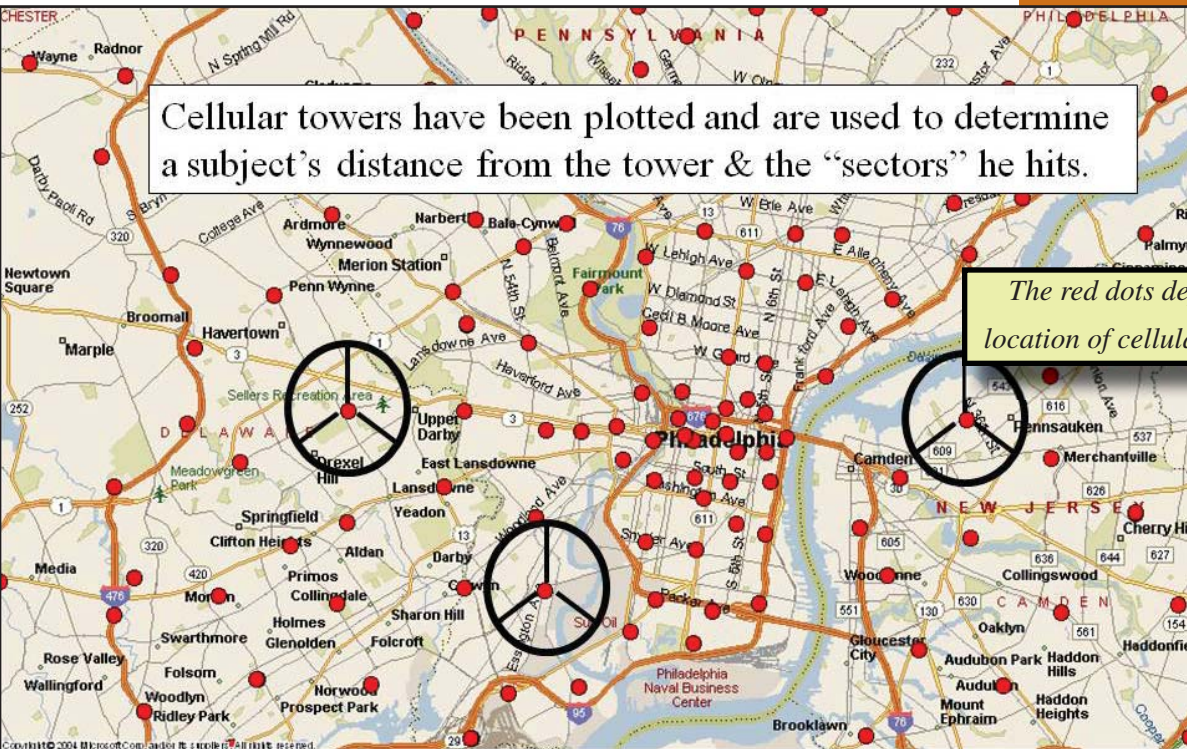

While geo-spatial mapping was not new in 2004, the use of geo-spatial mapping products by mainstream law enforcement was not a common occurrence. PPP made available easy-to-use capabilities for the street-level investigator to conduct tactical operations to generate intelligence.

Through the use of PPP, FBI Special Agents and analysts are able to identify "hot spots" of criminal activity and locations of unsolved crimes. Armed with better intelligence, they then deploy resources to make arrests, debrief subjects, and generate new sources to help solve unsolved crimes and create new investigative opportunities, all of which advance both the FBI's law enforcement and intelligence missions.

Project Welcome Home

The FBI's Criminal Investigative Division developed Project Welcome Home in an effort to support the apprehension and repatriation of international fugitives charged with crimes of violence. FBI Field Offices typically obtain INTERPOL Red Notices for fugitives suspected of having fled to another country. Once the fugitive is located internationally, the FBI often obtains a provisional arrest warrant enabling a foreign government to arrest an FBI fugitive.

A provisional arrest warrant is necessary so that one country can legally arrest an individual based on an arrest warrant or conviction of that individual in another country. The warrant details that pursuant to the extradition treaty the United States has with that country, the FBI is requesting that an individual be arrested within the law of that country. Within the provisional arrest warrant, there is also an indication of the FBI's intent to request extradition of the fugitive to the United States. The FBI's liaison in the foreign country, called a Legal Attaché, determines what the requirements are for a fugitive's extradition, deportation, or expulsion.

The normal extradition process is established by treaty. Extraditions, however, can take a substantial amount of time as they involve the formal, legal process and provide for the fugitive to appeal. Extraditions can take months or years to be completed. However, when a nation decides to expel or deport a fugitive outside of the formal extradition process, Project Welcome Home enables the FBI to quickly respond and expedite the repatriation of the fugitive.

Project Welcome Home funds the round trip travel of two law enforcement officials and a one-way trip for the fugitive from a foreign country to the United States.

"Top Tenner" Michael Jason Registe, wanted for the July 2007 double murders of two Columbus State University students in Georgia, was arrested by St. Maarten Police officials in conjunction with the Antilles Director of Public Prosecution. This was closely coordinated with the FBI's Legal Attaché in Bridgetown, Barbados. Registe was returned from St. Maarten to Georgia using Project Welcome Home funding to face state charges.

Since its inception in 2004, over 400 FBI fugitives have been returned to the United States from more than 42 countries to face prosecution.

America's Most Wanted

The FBI actively uses television programs to attract public attention to the “Ten Most Wanted Fugitives,” as well as other fugitive investigations. In particular, the FBI has been publicizing fugitives on the television program America's Most Wanted, now known as America's Most Wanted: America Fights Back (AMW), since 1988. Hosted by John Walsh and seen on the Fox Television Network, AMW seeks to solve cases and take dangerous criminals off the street by re-creating the crimes on television, as well as showing photographs and video of the actual criminals in action.

The show's flexible format permits the coverage of late-breaking and sensitive investigations while also giving law enforcement an opportunity to update viewers on developments in major cases. A nationwide toll-free hotline and Internet website enable AMW viewers to provide anonymous tips to law enforcement officials involved in the investigations.

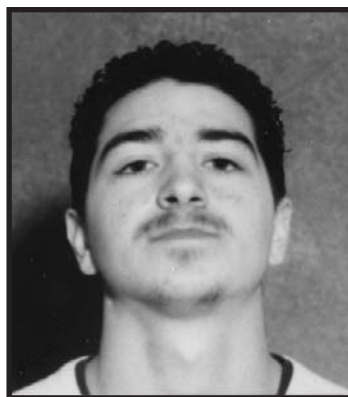

FBI “Top Ten Fugitives” and other wanted fugitives are routinely profiled on AMW, both when added to the “Top Ten” list and when updates warrant additional publicity. As a direct result of the AMW broadcasts, to date, 17 “Top Ten Fugitives” have been arrested.

THOMAS JAMES HOLDEN

*"Top Ten"
Program's First Success*

By the time Thomas Holden made the list, the FBI was well acquainted with him. Holden had been convicted of robbing a mail train back in the late 1920s. He was a product of the "easy days" before the rampant, lawless gangs of the Midwest were curbed by federal statutes expanding the FBI's authority to combat crime.

In 1930, Holden made an ingenious escape from Leavenworth Penitentiary in Leavenworth, Kansas, and was sought by the FBI as an escaped federal prisoner. He pushed his luck too far, renewing his criminal contacts and associating with such notorious mobsters as Alvin Karpis, Verne Miller, and Frank Nash.

While Holden was enjoying his precarious freedom from Leavenworth, he was alleged to have been one of the "outside" crew members responsible for a sensational armed break from Leavenworth in December of 1931.

The FBI's two-year search for him ended on July 7, 1932, when Special Agents and local police officers surrounded him and a fellow escapee on a golf course in Kansas City, Missouri. The pair was armed only with their golf clubs. Returned to prison, Holden did "easy time," exempted from hard labor because of a rheumatic heart condition.

Upon his release from prison on November 28, 1947, most of the prominent members of the underworld society Thomas Holden had known were no longer around. A number of the more reckless desperadoes had elected to "shoot it out" with law enforcement officers and died in the attempt to escape. His other crime partners were in Alcatraz or similar government institutions.

For 18 months, Holden led a comparatively quiet life. Returning to Chicago where his wife, Lillian, and two sons resided, he spent most of his time around various neighborhood taverns. He did not have a steady job. On June 5, 1949, at 3:15 a.m., the Chicago police responded to a radio call about a shooting on the West Side. In a fourth floor apartment two men and a woman lay dead. A .38 revolver containing four spent cartridges and two loaded shells was on a dresser. The victims were Mrs. Lillian Holden and her two brothers. They had been shot to death by her husband, Thomas James Holden, after a drinking party.

Holden was charged with murder and five days later was seen in the vicinity of Cedar Lake, Indiana. With evidence of his flight from the state of Illinois, the Chicago Police Department sought FBI assistance. A federal complaint was issued November 4, 1949, charging him with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution for the crime of murder. On March 14, 1950, Thomas Holden was the first fugitive to be placed on the FBI's newly created "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list.

Famous Cases

On June 23, 1951, FBI Agents apprehended Thomas James Holden near Beaverton, Oregon. The arrest was the result of a series of stories carried by the International News Service (INS) describing the nation's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives." An alert citizen identified the fugitive from a picture carried in the INS series in the Oregonian newspaper.

At the inauguration of the FBI's Ten Most Wanted program on March 14, 1950, the first afforded the nationwide publicity of this Thomas James Holden, who was wanted by the lawful interstate flight to avoid prosecution of a triple murder in Chicago, Illinois. His name was again featured in a republication of "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" on June 19, 1951.

WILLIAM RAYMOND NESBIT

Catching Him Was Child's Play

On December 22, 1936, William Raymond Nesbit, together with three other men, including Harold Baker and his girlfriend, burglarized a wholesale jewelry company at Sioux City, Iowa. The proprietor reported more than $37,000 worth of jewels had been stolen.

Later that month, all of the participants drove into Minnehaha County, South Dakota, five miles east of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, in order to obtain some dynamite to make nitroglycerin. After getting out of the car, three of the men became involved in a fight. The girlfriend got out of the automobile and attempted to stop the fight. As she did so, Nesbit struck her on the head with a hammer several times and one of the other men shot her. She was dragged into a powder house. Baker was lying in the powder house apparently unconscious. One of the men lit a fuse to some powder and fled the scene. Baker's girlfriend, although severely beaten and wounded, remained conscious and was able to crawl away.

The fuse exploded 3,500 pounds of dynamite and 7,000 pounds of black powder, killing Harold Baker. The explosion rocked the countryside, shattering windows, mirrors, and glassware in Sioux Falls, five miles away.

While the police were conducting an investigation to determine the cause of the blast, they were advised that a woman had been brought to the hospital and she was suffering from bullet wounds, exposure, and shock.

The investigation revealed information concerning the three men, including Nesbit, who had been responsible for the murder of Baker and for the shooting of Baker's girlfriend. Nesbit was apprehended in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, on February 26, 1937. He was returned to Sioux Falls where he was tried and convicted for murder and received life imprisonment in South Dakota State Penitentiary.

Nine years later, Nesbit's life term was commuted to 20 years. Nesbit, during this term had become a trustee and eventually was allowed to leave the prison to perform housework, landscaping, and duties as a chauffeur. On September 4, 1946, when the night check was made, Nesbit was missing.

On December 26, 1946, a federal complaint was filed before the United States Commissioner at Rapid City, South Dakota, charging William Raymond Nesbit with unlawful flight to avoid confinement and a warrant was issued for his arrest. The FBI entered the search.

In March of 1950, a news article, which carried a picture of Nesbit together with his description and fugitive status was published in a St. Paul, Minnesota, newspaper as well as in other newspapers. On Friday afternoon, March 17, 1950, a 14-year-old boy arrived home from school and noticed a newspaper on the kitchen floor. As he glanced at the paper, he noted a photograph of Nesbit and the accompanying article advising Nesbit was wanted by the FBI.

The boy and his 13-year-old friend spent much of their time playing along the Mississippi River bank in St. Paul, Minnesota, with other boys from the neighborhood. Over the past few months, they had become acquainted with "Ray," a man who lived in a cave in the river bank. They had visited "Ray" about once a week for four months beginning in November of 1949. He allowed them access to his cave, occasionally telling them stories about his travels. Finally, in early March of 1950, "Ray" told the boys to stay away from the cave because they were liable to get hurt.

The 14-year-old boy cut the article out of the newspaper believing the man in the photograph was "Ray." The boy took the article to his friend who thought the man in the photo was thinner than "Ray." The next day the boys went down to the cave to make sure "Ray" was indeed the man in the photograph. They then telephoned the police and told them of their suspicion.

On Saturday morning, March 18, 1950, just 2 days after William Raymond Nesbit was placed on the "Top Ten" list, Nesbit was apprehended by the St. Paul Police due to the ingenuity, intelligence, and courage displayed by two young boys.

ISAIE BEAUSOLEIL

Although investigators described “Top Ten Fugitive” Isaie Beausoleil as a tough-to-track “lone wolf” because he kept a low profile, they captured him because of his not-so-subtle disguise. Dressed in a black satin bathing suit, covered up with a blue blouse and a green skirt, Chicago Park Police searched him following reports of suspicious behavior in the women’s restroom. Initially searched by a female officer, Beausoleil was turned over to another Chicago Park Police officer once it was determined the woman was in fact a male. He was handcuffed bearing painted fingernails and taken into custody. Once fingerprinted, he was identified as a “Top Ten Fugitive.”

Already possessing a lengthy arrest record, he acquired a spot on the “Top Ten” on March 3, 1952, a few years after he was charged with first degree murder. On August 17, 1949, a bludgeoned woman’s body was discovered in a ditch alongside a Michigan road; two weeks later, police were on the hunt for Beausoleil.

Police ultimately named Beausoleil, the bludgeoned woman’s companion, as the “logical suspect” because his car was spotted fleeing the murder scene and was later recovered in Boston, Massachusetts.

Suspicion mounted when he visited North Avenue Beach in Chicago, Illinois, dressed as a woman and was observed acting peculiar in the women’s restroom.

In September of 1953, after deportation back to Canada because of violations of immigration laws, he was sentenced to five years’ probation for unlawful entry into the United States. A month later, Beausoleil stood trial for earlier crimes and received five-to-ten years and one-to-three years for attempted robbery and escape, in addition to a parole violation.

Clyde Edward Laws and an associate, while escaping from the armed robbery of a supermarket in Montgomery County, Maryland, on February 8, 1967, were stopped by two Montgomery County police officers. A gun battle ensued and one officer was seriously wounded in the stomach with a shot fired by Laws. Laws was also believed to have been wounded in the thigh by one of the officer's bullets.

Laws and his associate then carjacked a car driven by a soldier, abducted him, and drove to an amusement park where the soldier was released. The soldier's car was abandoned a short distance away and the robbers continued their flight. They were known to have stayed in a motel in Fredericksburg, Virginia. Laws was believed to have lost a significant amount of blood, and investigation at the motel revealed that a large quantity of linens were taken, possibly used as bandages. Investigators also found a blood-soaked makeshift bandage and a bloody tourniquet at the motel.

On February 28, 1967, the FBI placed Laws on the "Top Ten" list. Laws' associate was captured on May 20, 1967.

Laws, who was from Missouri, was in frequent telephonic contact with former employers, associates, and relatives. In his telephone conversations, Laws would never indicate the location he was calling from, and there was no real purpose to the telephone calls other than just "small talk." The person he most frequently contacted was a relative in Missouri, who was cooperating with the FBI.

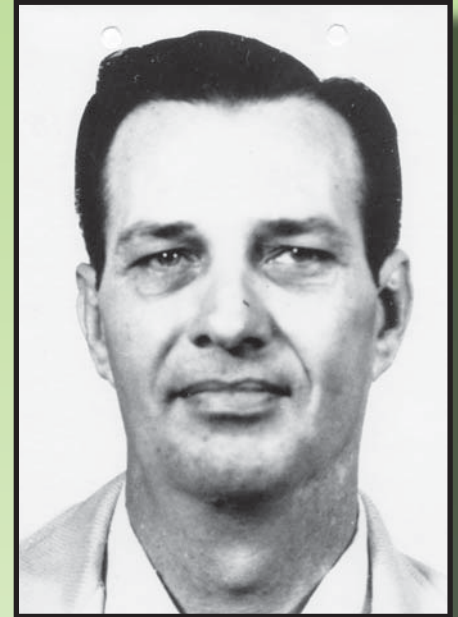

On the evening of May 18, 1967, while there was a thunderstorm in the Kansas City, Missouri, area, Laws called his relative. He again declined to indicate his whereabouts, but the person could hear thunder over the telephone at the same time could hear thunder outside and confronted Laws with the fact he must be in the Kansas City area.

Laws acknowledged that he, in fact, was in the area, so his relative expressed the desire to see him. Laws agreed to come to the house that evening at 10:00 p.m. He requested that all doors be locked with the exception of the back door to the house and that the lights be turned off. Prior to ending the call, the relative told Laws about his fear of weapons and asked that Laws come unarmed.

Laws' relative immediately notified the FBI. Agents secured the house and moved the occupants to safety. At promptly 10:00 p.m., the back door of the house opened and Laws slipped into the dining room. He was immediately placed under arrest. Laws commented, "The one time I need my gun I don't have it."

He was tried for kidnapping in state court in Easton, Maryland, and on May 9, 1968, was found guilty and sentenced to 20 years in prison.

JAMES EARL RAY

*Career Criminal,
Killer and
"Top Ten"
Two-Timer*

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., was assassinated on April 4, 1968, while standing on a balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tennessee, when a single rifle shot struck him in the neck. Holding the murder weapon, while standing in a bathtub in a nearby rooming house overlooking the motel, was a man that would later become one of the FBI's most memorable "Top Ten Fugitives."

Investigators uncovered latent fingerprints at the scene and compared them to the 53,000 people wanted by the FBI at that time. Eric Starvo Galt became the FBI's prime suspect after his prints matched those found at the scene. Additional investigative efforts determined that Eric Starvo Galt was an alias used by James Earl Ray.

Ray's arrest record was lengthy, including a 20-year prison sentence for robbing a supermarket in St. Louis, Missouri. Moving from place to place his whole life, he had no intention of settling in prison and eventually escaped in 1967 by hiding in a truck transporting food from the prison bakery. Ray made his way around the country, driving his purchased 1966 white Mustang 19,000 miles within nine months, stopping in California, Louisiana, Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia. While in Alabama, on March 30, 1968, he purchased a 30.06 rifle with telescopic sight from a Birmingham arms dealer and then drove his Mustang to Memphis, Tennessee.

After the murder of Dr. King, police found his Mustang abandoned in Atlanta and discovered that Eric Starvo Galt was its owner. After determining that Galt and Ray were the same person, authorities issued a federal arrest warrant and charged Ray with conspiring to interfere with a constitutional right of a United States citizen. Additionally, he was charged with unlawful interstate flight to avoid confinement, following his 1967 escape from prison.

On June 8, 1968, roughly two months after the assassination, authorities caught up with Ray at London's Heathrow Airport while he was trying to flee to Africa and extradited him to the United States. Initially, Ray claimed he did not shoot Dr. King, but came to Memphis in order to participate in a "gun running" venture, and that those in charge of it had set him up. Despite his claim of innocence, Ray pleaded guilty in an apparent bid to avoid the death penalty and was sentenced to 99 years at Brushy Mountain State Penitentiary in Tennessee. Three days after his conviction, he tried to withdraw his guilty plea, reiterating that a man he met in Montreal named "Raoul" tricked him into going to Memphis.

Ray appeared on the "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list a second time in 1977 when he escaped from the Brushy Mountain State Penitentiary. Ray and six other inmates used materials from the prison machine shop to assemble a ladder and climb over the wall of the prison. He was tracked down by bloodhounds and apprehended 54 hours after escaping.

Skepticism about Ray's involvement in the murder of Dr. King would later surface. King's family and close associates came to believe that Ray did not act alone and supported efforts to obtain a retrial. King's family pursued a wrongful death lawsuit against Memphis restaurant owner Loyd Jowers after he alleged that he hired someone other than Ray to murder King. In December of 1999, a Memphis jury decided Ray did not fire the shot that killed King and that government agencies were involved in the assassination plot.

A year earlier, in August of 1998, the Department of Justice debunked Ray's claim of being set up by "Raoul" when it conducted a limited review of the King assassination. After a year and a half of investigation into conspiracy claims, the Department of Justice concluded that it found no reliable evidence of anyone involved in the assassination plot named "Raoul" or a government-led conspiracy.

RICHARD LEE TINGLER, JR

The Hired Hand

On the morning of September 16, 1968, the lifeless bodies of three men and a woman were found in a Cleveland, Ohio, park. Each victim had been shot in the head, some victims several times.

On the night of October 20, 1968, a Columbus, Ohio, dairy store was held up and two teenaged store employees were murdered execution style. The victims, a 15-year-old boy and an 18-year-old girl, were bound hand and foot, gagged, brutally beaten about the head, and then shot in the back of the head with an automatic pistol. The manager of the store was also viciously beaten. However, she survived the assault, despite efforts to strangle her with a wire coat hanger.

Through investigation, it was determined that Richard Lee Tingler, Jr., a native of Portsmouth, Ohio, was allegedly responsible for the six brutal murders.

On October 24, 1968, a federal arrest warrant was issued and Tingler was charged with unlawful interstate flight to avoid prosecution for murder and armed robbery was issued in Columbus, Ohio. In December of 1968, the FBI added him to its "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list.

Tingler had sought to conceal his location and identity by gaining employment on a farm near Dill City and using the alias of Don Williams. But his attempt to avoid apprehension came to an end on May 19, 1969, when his employer visited the Washita County Sheriff's Office. There, he observed a Wanted Poster for Tingler and noticed how the photo and description of Tingler strongly resembled his hired hand, Don Williams.

The employer, wanting to be sure of his identification of Tingler before telling the sheriff about his fears, contacted a neighbor. He requested that the neighbor visit the sheriff's office and view the wanted notices of Tingler. The neighbor did so and agreed with his friend's observations. They notified the sheriff of Tingler's location.

On the afternoon of May 19, 1969, an FBI Agent and members of the Washita County Sheriff's Office arrested Tingler at the farmhouse. At the time of his arrest, Tingler was armed with a .25 calibre automatic pistol.

Noted as a "cold, calculating, and deliberate killer," Tingler was sentenced to die in the electric chair.

Famous Cases

Ruth Eisemann-Schier may not look like she belonged on the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list, but after she kidnapped a millionaire's daughter she not only earned her spot on the list, but became the first woman to do so.

On December 17, 1968, Eisemann-Schier and her ex-con accomplice, Gary Steven Krist, kidnapped 20-year-old Barbara Mackle from her motel room in Decatur, Georgia. Eisemann-Schier, disguised herself as a man, and Krist impersonated a policeman to gain entry into the room. Once inside, they gagged Barbara's mother and forced Barbara to come with them.

They buried Barbara inside a coffin with ventilation tubes, a fan, and a little food in a shallow grave in the woods outside of Atlanta. Krist and Eisemann-Schier then demanded Robert Mackle, Barbara's father and a wealthy Florida real estate developer, pay a $500,000 ransom. After Mackle paid the ransom, the money was recovered by police on a routine patrol who observed a man carrying a large bag.

The police asked the man to stop and identify himself, but instead, the man dropped the money and ran.

Then the Atlanta FBI Office received a telephone call from an anonymous male, believed to be Krist, claiming he knew of Barbara's location. The caller said Barbara was in a capsule buried in the Norcross area and, 80 hours later, a healthy Barbara was discovered after an extensive effort by FBI Agents to locate the capsule and dig through the red clay with boards, tire irons, sticks, and bare hands.

A federal arrest warrant was issued in December and Krist and Eisemann-Schier were charged with the kidnapping. The pair had split after the kidnapping, and Krist was captured in Florida.

Eisemann-Schier had moved to Norman, Oklahoma, and began to blend into the community. Donna Wills, her alias, was a 19-year-old, financially struggling college student at Oklahoma University. Eisemann-Schier had applied for a job at the Central State Mental Hospital, which required applicants to submit fingerprints. A clerk at the Oklahoma State Bureau of Identification saw that the prints were a positive match to Ruth Eisemann-Schier and contacted authorities.

She was in Oklahoma only three weeks when she was taken into custody while working as a carhop at the popular Boomerang Restaurant. Eisemann-Schier immediately admitted who she was and shocked everyone that knew her as polite and shy Donna Wills. Eisemann-Schier had apparently suspected her capture because she left goodbye notes with borrowed items in her apartment and told her employer that she would be leaving soon.

THEODORE ROBERT BUNDY

Notorious Serial Killer

Theodore Robert Bundy reigned terror across the United States between January of 1974 and February of 1978, killing on average one woman each month. By the time he appeared on the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list, he had assaulted and killed at least 36 women in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Utah, Colorado, and Florida.

One of the most notorious American serial killers in history, Bundy dodged law enforcement's radar for roughly a year until coordinated investigative efforts in late 1975 by five Western states identified a pattern between his movements—tracked by gasoline credit card purchases—and the murdered women.

Bundy would act helpless, wearing leg and arm casts, or appear to be in some position of authority in order to gain the victim's trust. Many of his victims were lured to his vehicle, brutally beaten and sexually assaulted.

Bundy was first arrested on August 16, 1975, after police discovered handcuffs, a mask fashioned of pantyhose, an ice pick, and other items on a routine traffic stop. Shortly after his arrest, one of Bundy's surviving victims identified him as the assailant from a police line-up. Police were able to connect his vehicle to the surviving victim's kidnapping, Bundy was convicted on March 1, 1976, and sentenced to one-to-15 years in prison.

He was then extradited to Colorado to stand trial for the murder of a nurse at an Aspen ski resort. While awaiting his trial, Bundy escaped in June of 1977 from the Pitkin County Law Library by jumping out of the second-story window. Six days later, he was arrested and sent to the Garfield County Jail in Colorado. Bundy was there for only six months before he escaped on New Year's Eve 1977, by losing 30 pounds so he could fit through a small light fixture hole in the ceiling of his cell. As a result of this escape, the FBI added Bundy to the "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" list on February 10, 1978, after a federal arrest warrant was issued in Denver, Colorado, after he was charged with unlawful interstate flight to avoid prosecution.

He escaped to Tallahassee, Florida, where he continued his murderous rampage. He broke into a Florida State University (FSU) sorority house on January 14, 1978, where he bludgeoned and strangled two sleeping women. After leaving the sorority house, he broke into a house a few blocks away, then clubbed and severely injured an FSU student. A few weeks later, in February of 1978, he abducted and killed a 12-year-old Lake City, Florida, girl, leaving her body in a pigsty, which was not found until a year later.

Bundy's rampage came to a halt on February 15, 1978, when he was pulled over by Pensacola police while driving in a stolen vehicle toward the Florida Panhandle. After the officer learned the vehicle was reported stolen, Bundy was fingerprinted, identified, and charged with the sorority murders. Authorities were able to match bite marks from one victim to Bundy's teeth, and also had a witness who saw him leaving the sorority house with a club in his hand. He stood trial in June of 1979 for the FSU murders and was found guilty and sentenced to die. Bundy was then tried in January of 1980 for the murder of the 12-year-old Lake City, Florida, girl and was sentenced to death.

Bundy obtained two stays of execution before finally being executed on November 24, 1989. In order to get a stay of execution, Bundy would confess to various murders soon before he was to be executed. When his third death warrant was issued, the judge did not grant a stay of execution and sent him to the electric chair.

ERIC ROBERT RUDOLPH

Of The Woods*

On the early morning of May 31, 2003, a patrolman spotted what he thought was a burglar behind the Save-A-Lot Supermarket in Murphy, North Carolina, and took him into custody; the officer was unaware that he had captured one of the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives." Despite Eric Robert Rudolph's attempt to provide a false identity, other law enforcement officials recognized his face from an FBI wanted poster. A skilled outdoorsman, Rudolph, had managed to elude law enforcement officials for five years while hiding out in the mountains after bombing four sites in Georgia and Alabama. Rudolph began his violent attacks on July 27, 1996, when he planted a bomb in a backpack in a crowded Centennial Olympic Park in Atlanta, Georgia. A woman who traveled with her daughter to watch the 1996 Summer Olympics was killed and more than 100 others were injured.

Shortly after, Rudolph would proceed to bomb two more locations in Georgia and one in Birmingham, Alabama. The Georgia bombings exhibited a similarity: a second bomb detonated to take out first responders and law enforcement.

On January 16, 1997, an abortion clinic bombing in Atlanta injured seven people as nails and other shrapnel blasted through the crowd outside the office building that housed the clinic. The second device caused all seven injuries whereas the first bomb injured no one.

About a month later, on February 21, 1997, Rudolph injured five people when he planted a bomb on the back patio of a crowded gay nightclub in Atlanta. A second bomb was discovered the following day in the parking lot that was intended to go off, but failed.

Rudolph's last attack on January 29, 1998, provided authorities with necessary clues and rendered them something the previous bombings had not—a witness. His abortion clinic bombing in Birmingham, Alabama, killed an off-duty police officer and severely injured the clinic's head nurse. The witness claimed to see a man flee the scene in a truck and wrote down the license plate numbers. Authorities ran the plate number and named Eric Robert Rudolph as the owner of the vehicle.

Initially, officials were only seeking information from Rudolph in connection with the bombing, but he soon became the primary suspect after investigators recovered nails and other evidence at Rudolph's home, in his truck, and in a rented storage unit. Authorities charged him with the Birmingham bombing and later connected Rudolph to the three bombings in Georgia.

Although the bombs were not identical, authorities were able to establish a connection through forensic evidence. Once he learned he was a prime suspect, Rudolph escaped to the mountains of western North Carolina, initiating a massive manhunt.

Famous Cases

Known to frequent the forested area by his childhood home, Rudolph was sought by authorities, and a $1 million reward was posted for information leading to his arrest. The last sighting of him before his capture was in July of 1998, when he visited a friend's home seeking food and supplies. Days later, Rudolph broke into the friend's food store and stole supplies, food, and a truck that was later found abandoned with money and a note in the front seat. Once in custody, authorities described Rudolph as "relieved" and acknowledged that he appeared to be tired of life on the run.

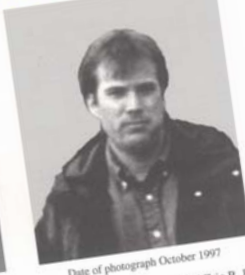

A federal judge ruled Rudolph had to be tried in Alabama first and then in Georgia. He agreed to a plea bargain and pleaded guilty to all charges to avoid the death penalty. Soon after, Rudolph wrote a statement detailing his motives for the bombings. Exposed to extremism at a young age, he railed against abortion clinics and homosexuality throughout his 11-page manifesto.

He is currently serving five consecutive life sentences.

WARREN JEFFS

Some may describe Warren Jeffs as a tall, gangly, and clean-cut looking man. But according to his followers, Jeffs was distinguished as a “Prophet” of the polygamous sect known as the Fundamentalist Latter Day Saints (FLDS). This group separated itself from mainstream Mormonism in 1890 after polygamy was banned. Estimated at approximately 10,000 followers, the FLDS has communities in Hildale, Utah, and Colorado City, Arizona.

After Jeffs’ 92-year-old father died, his legacy was passed on to him. And, in 2002, Jeffs became the leader of the FLDS. While maintaining this position, Jeffs was the only person empowered to perform marriages between minor females and adult males within the FLDS colony. Jeffs also assumed the authority to strip male followers of their wives, children, and property without forethought or question.

Jeffs was wanted for two counts of sexual assault on a minor. These alleged offenses took place in March of 2002, and on or between July 1st and December 31, 2002. Jeffs was also being sought for conspiracy to commit sexual conduct with a minor. This incident allegedly happened sometime between January and June of 2002. All of the alleged offenses took place in the vicinity of Colorado City, Arizona.

On June 9, 2005, a Mohave County grand jury charged Jeffs with sexual conduct with a minor and conspiracy to commit sexual conduct with a minor. A state arrest warrant was issued in Arizona on June 10, 2005. Additionally, a federal arrest warrant was issued in Arizona on June 27, 2005. Jeffs was charged with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution. On May 6, 2006, the FBI placed Warren Jeffs, a former accountant and private school teacher, on the “Ten Most Wanted Fugitives” list.

Jeffs probably had better days, but August 28, 2006, was not likely one of them. While he was riding in a 2007 red Cadillac Escalade, a Nevada Department of Public Safety trooper pulled over the car for a traffic stop. This occurred after the trooper noticed that valid license plates were not displayed on the vehicle. After questioning one of the occupants in the vehicle, it became apparent to the trooper that this individual resembled Warren Jeffs, an FBI “Ten Most Wanted Fugitive.” The trooper contacted the FBI and Agents responded to the scene. Jeffs was identified by the FBI and taken into custody.

Joseph J. Brock
1908 - 1952

Jack R. Coler
1947 - 1975

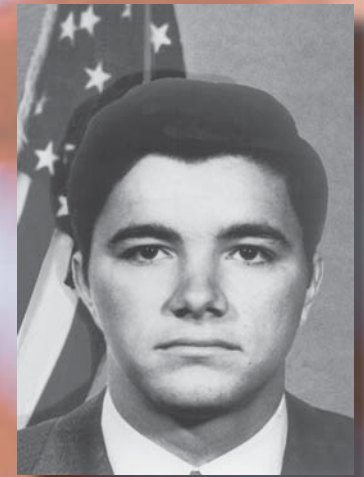

Anthony Palmisano
1942 - 1969

The FBI honors its Special Agents killed in the line of duty as the result of a direct adversarial force or by the hand of an adversary. Each Agent embraced the values of the FBI and served with honor. The following six Agents were killed by "Top Ten" Fugitives and, to ensure that we never lose sight of their ultimate sacrifice, they have been inducted into the FBI's Hall of Honor.

On July 26, 1952, Special Agent Joseph J. Brock was shot and killed in the lobby of a New York City hotel during the apprehension of bank robbery fugitive, Gerhard Arthur Puff.

Special Agents Anthony Palmisano and Edwin R. Woodruffe were shot and killed in Washington, D.C., on January 8, 1969, by escaped federal prisoner Billie Austin Bryant.

Ronald A. Williams
1947 - 1975

On June 26, 1975, Special Agents Jack R. Coler and Ronald A. Williams were killed while attempting to serve arrest warrants for robbery and assault with a dangerous weapon on the Oglala Sioux Indian Reservation in Pine Ridge, South Dakota. Indicted for these murders, Leonard Peltier was convicted and received two consecutive life sentences.

Edwin R. Woodruffe
1941 - 1969

On August 9, 1979, Special Agent Johnnie L. Oliver was shot and killed in Cleveland, Ohio, while pursuing fugitive Melvin Bay Guyon, who was wanted for kidnapping, rape, and armed robbery.
