

Azaryan K.
I.M. Gizhko, research supervisor
Donetsk National University of Economics and Trade

MODERN DAY TRAVEL WITH THE INTERNET

The Internet marketing of tourism products has become a popular trend. There are many internet sites that consumers can visit in order to get their tourism needs filled. Because they can reach such a large audience via the web it works well for the companies and consumers alike.

With Internet marketing, consumers will be able to find out all kinds of information that they need to plan their trips. This can be done at their own convenience, so any time of the day or night they can take care of what they need to do in terms of planning for an upcoming trip and getting the items that they need, like trip planners and other essentials. With all the remarkable information that is available to them, they will know more and more about finding the best deals and getting the most value for their trips.

The Internet makes it possible for consumers to download maps and learn as much about their destinations as possible. It also provides a vehicle for them to purchase tickets and rent a car. Doing so over the Internet can save time and money. Many companies offer a variety of discounts over the Internet and it is quick and easy for the consumer.

Using the Internet marketing companies can find out firsthand how each of their products is selling. This gives them a better idea of what to offer the public. It also gives them a forum to receive feedback to better serve their customers. When a company can see right away the results of their efforts it helps them to plan better. With this knowledge companies can become stronger and more profitable because they will be reaching a larger audience than they could without using the Internet as a tool. This in turn will give them more and more publicity all over the world and will bring even more business to them.

The use of the Internet marketing for tourism will continue to rise. The public will find it easier and easier to get the things that they need in a quick time so that they can plan their trips. With all the benefits of the Internet marketing of tourism products the public will find that using the web will be their first choice to find the information and products they need. They will never have to leave the comfort of their own home and the convenience will make their lives a lot easier. Travel will continue to be popular and tourism products should be better and better as more people take advantage of this service on the web.