Military Establishment: Gentlemen Pensioners (Gentlemen at Arms) 1660-1837

The principal officers of the band of gentlemen pensioners, whose title was changed to that of gentlemen at arms in 1834, were the captain, lieutenant, standard bearer and clerk of the cheque, all appointed by royal warrant.¹ Their salaries were £1,000, £500, £310 and £120 respectively. The captain carried a gold or gold-tipped staff, the lieutenant and standard bearer black staffs with silver heads.²

The paymaster was appointed by the Crown by letters patent under the great seal. Sir Lewis Kirke was appointed for life.³ His successor, John Kirke, was originally appointed during pleasure in 1664 but subsequently received a grant for life in 1676 together with a reversion to his son John who did not live to succeed.⁴ All subsequent appointments were during pleasure. The office was granted in survivorship in 1718 and 1728.⁵

The gentleman harbinger of the gentleman pensioners was appointed and sworn in by the captain.⁶ His salary was £70 per annum.⁷

The band of gentleman pensioners stood guard with their axes in the presence chamber. They also attended the monarch from that room to the chapel royal on Sundays and Collar Days; to the House of Lords and St. Paul's on ceremonial occasions; and at drawing rooms. Twenty were supposed to be in waiting by quarter, the whole band giving its attendance at Christmas, Easter and other festivals.⁸ By 1735, the Duke of Montagu, captain of the band, 'observed this material part of their Duty of daily attendance in the Presence Chamber has been of late years neglected.' He attempted to restore it, but dispensed with the special attendance at Christmas. By the time of George IV, attendance was again neglected, leading to reform (and a new name) under his successor.⁹

The size of the band was reduced from 50 to 40 in March 1671, the remaining ten officers being reduced to half-pay and the right to succeed to subsequent vacancies.¹⁰ During the later Stuart period there was some controversy as to whether the King or the captain had the right of appointment; however, the latter seems to have been the usual appointing officer in practice. From 1689, that right was explicitly and finally vested in the captain, but appointees were subject to royal approval. Thus gentlemen were usually appointed by the captain and sworn in by the clerk of the cheque. Their salary was £100 per annum apiece.¹¹

Yeomen of the Guard 1660-1837

In 1660 the officers of the yeomen of the guard were the captain and the clerk of the cheque. The offices of lieutenant and ensign were instituted in 1668 and those of four corporals in 1669.¹ In the course of time the corporals came to be more commonly known as exons and this term was officially adopted in the warrants of appointment in 1836.² All these officers were appointed by royal warrant.

The salaries were as follows: captain £1,000, lieutenant £500, ensign £300, clerk of the cheque and corporals £150. The captain carried a gold or gold-tipped staff, the lieutenant a black staff with a silver head.³

The yeomen of the guard provided the effective indoor palace guard. They gave their attendance on the great or King's staircase and in the guard chamber, '40 by day, 20 to watch by night'.

They also attended the King when he went abroad. The yeomen were intended to be ‘the best quality under Gentry, and of a larger Stature (for every one of them ought to be 6 Foot high).’ Their dress was, and remains, distinctive:

These were Scarlet Coats down to the Knee, and Scarlet Breeches, both richly guarded with Black Velvet and rich badges upon their Coats before and behind. Moreover Black Velvet round broad-crowned Caps (according to the mode in the Reign of Hen. 8) with Ribbons of the Kings colour: One half of them of late bear in their hands Harquebuzes and the other half partisans, with large Swords by their sides.⁴

Yeomen of the guard were appointed by the captain. Prior to 1670 there were 250 Yeomen. In that year they were retrenched to 100 in ordinary with an additional 70 supernumerary at half-pay to succeed as vacancies opened up. The supernumerary yeomen seem to have been abolished in 1685. In 1669 they were paid 2s. 6d. per diem, or £45 11s.⁵ Under William III this sunk to £30 per annum, ‘which falls much short of what it has been formerly’. Under Queen Anne, their pay was raised to £39 11s 3d per annum, with yeoman ushers, hangers and bedgoers making an additional £10.⁶ Yeoman of the guard also received diet when in waiting until its abolition in 1813.⁷

The following lists suffer from the fragmentary nature of surviving records for the yeomen of the guard. Gaps in the record of admissions are indicated by gaps in the lists.
