

eCOMMONS

Loyola University Chicago
Loyola eCommons

English: Faculty Publications and Other Works

Faculty Publications

2015

grid

Laura Goldstein

Loyola University Chicago, Lgolds2@luc.edu

Recommended Citation

Goldstein, Laura. grid. The Journal Petra, , : 1-4, 2015. Retrieved from Loyola eCommons, English: Faculty Publications and Other Works,

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Faculty Publications at Loyola eCommons. It has been accepted for inclusion in English: Faculty Publications and Other Works by an authorized administrator of Loyola eCommons. For more information, please contact ecommons@luc.edu.

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 3.0 License.

© The Journal Petra, 2015.

Current / Past / About / Twitter

Laura Goldstein

grid

healing parallel #1: birds and snow we make a little nest of flakes that becomes the next life and then a wave of air. i might have mixed up a memory with a strong feeling in the present- i merely chose to remind myself. i don't become attached in need of rest also in need of energy. a certain kind of rest and a certain kind of energy. what are the other words? you can spread them out on a grid whose vertices light up momentarily with meaning. i can't remember the rest- i have to be reminded or become addicted to the naturally tactile. every day and night every day and night the grid of night as parallel to that of day each bird a black spot on the page works to further its meaning by just being. stop thinking, my teacher said. so i saw a reflection of last night in the snow but didn't realize until the day was finished a shape that landed in my hair and stayed, since it was cold enough. an imprint made with air. our bodies against a common surface we observe with pleasure. is reflected light more healing because we appreciate the abstraction or is it the eye's more tactile involvement? what do you mean by participation, he asked i don't know, i said, it could be the opposite of addiction.

i keep observing myself nothing happens but that's not true. in explanation to a friend on the phone it all sounds good this is common i observe it. yesterday a long walk along a spiral of snow a low sun followed. i kept turning to see where it was because it was allowing me to see. what rules. i'm watching what's warm to see what changes the high contrast against the cold snow in stasis, no birds, no sun, but day is what i'm describing now. at night i looked out at what was there, trees exploded grids of branches artificial orange light right outside there is no parallel to the present that adds up to addiction, only the tactile reality of time.

what numbers tell us, i said to them is that sometimes we have to look harder for patterns. how slow a great change actually takes, he responded. would you like to try this experiment? i asked them. it's almost the end of the day. they didn't respond according to the book i'm reading about language, that means they perceive me as dangerous. as soon as it's night i think "i need to rest". don't spend too much time thinking, i told them. i've heard that before is this the right way to be teaching? i am this small space. we're all silent between night and day, all on a grid. as if i really miss you, but that can't be true. but as someone entirely new i can say that when you gave me these words i was happy and i'm happier now that i've used them.

the days are actually changing me. i wonder at this pattern. i thought about it as she was touching me, rubbing the blood out of my lungs on the phone i told her about how words when in a certain pattern touch me in a certain way. she said yeah. as the night comes on the snow turns black. you don't know me you don't know me at all i say to myself as a person i am a grid of myself any pattern i create is to show you that grid it exists because of time. can you tell that i am going away soon can you tell that i care i'm trying to remember the words as if they were parallel to my thinking new plan: winter weather is an ether of remembered pleasures. lungs rough up into a grid of addiction, parallel to an earlier era. that's not true i then tell myself. when the birds disappear under the snow at night i wait for the day and its perpetual light. this is not healing. dependent on memories months before. she walked in the door offered me a small cookie dipped in dark chocolate from a small paper bag started singing. when the heat switches off i can still hear her behind the closed door of her room change happens under the snow this is something we know and think about all the way up to and through the spring healing parallel #2: an era of addiction the snow, even somehow an addition at night my teacher gave me an image then we all moved with palpable possibility birds probably feel that way along with the unmarked fear winter's warmth is an end when i can't think of anything marked out onto a grid that i use as a representation of myself it's not that i'm tired it's something else it's deep appreciation of the tactile that requires attention from a direction i'm accustomed to drawing upon as addiction now that space is ready to be filled with light there's no addiction to silence a parallel to a guess a guess i ordered an extra word saw the whole day and the next day as a grid of light and invisibility where are you i asked everyone I had just finished reading and it felt tactile my lungs responded what happens at night a dirt bird didn't make it under a pile of short phrases I commented on like “elaborate” melting snow is still snow “it's slippery” i said as i slipped you know that story about looking back because it's impossible calm down some healing can happen in cloud's pink shadow desired effect of a list static and still every word that stays the waves are clear today, rolling the light in large parallels. there is no pattern a bird is a grid that has flown. no other addictions have grown it's healing singing is sometimes better for language they told me so why can't we sing all the time? the snow in little circles on each wave the lungs wake up a bit look back to the page where the list is it's tactile. this is not the night to wonder how i'll feel on other nights. it's true

Laura Goldstein's first collection of poetry, loaded arc, was released by Trembling Pillow Press in 2013 and her second collection, awesome camera, was published by Make Now Press in 2014. She has also published six chapbooks as well as numerous poems and essays in magazines in print and online. She currently teaches at Loyola University and co-curates the Red Rover Reading Series.