DANKWOORD

In any project requiring as much blood, sweat and tears as this, it is impossible to acknowledge, completely and accurately, all those individuals who've provided their invaluable advice, selfless help and kind assistance. Any omissions are unintentional and entirely my own.

Special words of thanks are extended:

To my promotor and co-promotor;

- Harry Bartelink, my promotor in the truest sense of the word, for providing guidance and support. You have taught me, tacking and jibing aside, more than you will ever know.
- Ben Mijnheer, for all your sage advice, generosity, sense of humour and, of course, fine taste in food and wine. Your kindness and friendship will always be appreciated.

To my partners in crime, the paranimfen; yes-we managed to fool them all;

- Marco Schwarz, for opening wide the doors of Hotel Schwarz, where the love of slow food is only exceed by the generosity of the hosts.
- Coen Hurkmans, for demonstrating that it is possible to keep one's sanity, despite looming deadlines and countless revisions, and that Dutch food, despite first impressions, is not entirely unedible.

To my co-authors; Eugene, Lambert, and Marcel, my sincere thanks for all your help.

To my colleagues back in the Great White North; Bob, Matt, and Cindy, my heartfelt thanks for all your encouragement.

To my family; Gabriel, Christine, Byoung, mom, and dad, my profound thanks for all your patience and understanding.

Last but not least, to the second best thing that's every happened to me;

- Sarah, for your enduring patience, good humour, and affection. I am fortunate and blessed - none of this would have been possible without you.
