Small White Houses

Albert Caruana

Silent moonlight darkness
The small white houses lie still,
Lost in the plains and the mountains,
Shrouded beneath a light clouded blanket,
Watched over by a lone silvery moon.

No one roams the streets,
Through the alleys the tumbleweed blows,
There are no lights in the windows,
And the town's old graveyard sleeps,
Tranquil and eternal, lost, lost
In the vast lonely expanse of time and space.
