Watch What You Say

By Brianna Eden Rutland

I've seen children with a little shine in their eye
Just because they see the sky cry and they don't know why
Then they scream and they think something is behind them
Creeping and following them- it's a dark stranger
They've never been introduced to before
Now- all of a sudden- it's stretched out over the floor
His shadow- but he doesn't know
You see- children whether the age of three- undoubtedly
They'll go through this stage
Innocence.

And life is like a horror movie with no retakes or last cuts
Only reruns and people reliving the same stuff- parallel with the past
Because we can't just get past the past- people go too fast for their own good
Everything that's been done is done
And done is just another form of a rerun- it's over with
No one learns their lesson- so let's review this again
Don't let their mind follow
Because soon it will grow dark and hollow
I'm gonna make you skip chewing and just swallow ALL of what I have to say
The influence
I repeat the influence of everyone and everything
They imitate everyone and anything
Sponges that lurk when you least expect it
Repeat a curse word and you wish that you hadn't said it
These strong little minds- just waiting to mock
Any information to be downloaded and locked
So watch your mouth- keep away from the slang
These children are the future so just watch what you're saying.
