The Window to Your Soul

by Alexis Edney-Jones

As I look through the window to your soul,
I see my reflection.
Behind my reflection
I see the pain and sorrow you've encountered.
Not only can I see it,
I can also feel it as I
place my small hands into yours.

The pressures from your hand
exerted on mine.
I place my head on your chest. Boom. Boom. Boom.
The sound of your hear beating is like the footsteps of a man walking down a silent hallway.
I see, feel, hear
about your troubles
as I look through the window to your soul.
