Boundaries

Kyle Moyant

Blockades and barriers overcome connections,
Links disintegrate as deserts and oceans abound.
Friendships crumble as do the roads that connect them.

Walls are so high that they extend out of view.
Oceans are so immense that they swallow love.
Disaster strikes unexpectedly and leaves many stranded
Though life continues and trouble persists.

Barricades section off a common ground,
And those once connected are lost.
Friends are forgotten and new ones are made,
Though some will feel great pain.

Some boundaries are natural,
Though others are not.
These boundaries should not exist,
Yet the world seems to fill with them.

War sends off soldiers to settle disputes,
Yet their families soon face great losses.
Occupations impact one's decisions,
And often money controls where one must live.

With great walls barring communication,
Some relationships simply cannot exist.
One often loses faith,
Though others learn to compensate.
