

Cornell University
ILR School

Cornell University ILR School
DigitalCommons@ILR

Articles and Chapters

ILR Collection

7-4-1998

Ask the Jobless If Marx Is Relevant

Jeffrey Grabelsky
Cornell University, jmg30@cornell.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.ilr.cornell.edu/articles>

 Part of the Labor History Commons, and the Unions Commons

Thank you for downloading an article from DigitalCommons@ILR.

Support this valuable resource today!

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the ILR Collection at DigitalCommons@ILR. It has been accepted for inclusion in Articles and Chapters by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@ILR. For more information, please contact catherwood-dig@cornell.edu.

If you have a disability and are having trouble accessing information on this website or need materials in an alternate format, contact web-accessibility@cornell.edu for assistance.

Ask the Jobless If Marx Is Relevant

Keywords

unions, construction, protest, labor movement

Disciplines

Labor History | Unions

Comments

Suggested Citation

Grabelsky, J. (1998, July 4). Ask the jobless if Marx is relevant [Letter to the editor]. New York Times. Retrieved [insert date] from Cornell University, School of Industrial and Labor Relations site: <http://digitalcommons.ilr.cornell.edu/articles/291/>

The New York Times

Ask the Jobless If Marx Is Relevant

Published: July 4, 1998

To the Editor:

Your July 2 editorial on the demonstration against the Metropolitan Transportation Authority's awarding of a contract to a nonunion bidder focused on the small number of construction workers who turned violent. But the vast majority were orderly.

What I saw was a militant protest that was legitimate and effective. The unions argue that the "lowest responsible bidder" must be defined with greater clarity to insure that public money does not go to contractors who offer no health insurance, invest no money in training and flout laws regulating the industry.

The demonstration also revealed the depth of working-class anger and anxiety in New York. The protesters believe a revitalized labor movement can restore the promise of American life.

JEFF GRABELSKY

New York, July 2, 1998

The writer is director, construction industry program, Cornell School of Industrial and Labor Relations.