Sometimes
a fly equals the size of a house.

within my mind
the dancer with hair trailing further than possible leaps a mile wide canyon where in a river ribbons through and among the pebble sized boulders beyond and beyond the green hips of mountains no higher than the sky.
yet where i walk
waist high bushes
are far greater obstacles than the giant redwoods across the continent in California. things are always larger than they are and smaller than they seem.

so i easily step above the clouds or with the moon in my pocket i can find shelter from the rain beneath the eaves of mushrooms.

leaves shiver outside clinging to damp bark-my stomach growls, i'm hungry
