

Contributors

Niels Bjerre-Poulsen has a PhD in American History from the University of California, Santa Barbara (1993) and is an Associate Professor at the Center for American Studies/Department of History, University of Southern Denmark. His books include Right Face; Organizing the Conservative Movement, 1945-65 (Copenhagen: Museum Tusulanum Press/University of Copenhagen, 2002), Projections of Power in the Americas (ed. With Jan Gustafsson & Helene Balslev) (Oxford: Routledge, 2012), Vietnamkrigen – en International Historie 1945-1975 (Copenhagen: Gyldendal, 2015), and USA's Historie (with Erling Bjøl) (Copenhagen: Gyldendal, 2018). He can be reached at nbp@sdu.dk.

D. Jason Berggren is an associate professor of political science at Georgia Southwestern State University in Americus. In 2007, he received his Ph.D. in political science from Florida International University in Miami. Afterwards, he was a postdoctoral teaching fellow for two years at the University of Georgia. His primary teaching and research interests include the U.S. presidency and religion and American politics. His most recent articles appeared in the Americus Times-Recorder and an encyclopedia entitled Presidents and Presidencies in American History.

Rasmus Sinding Søndergaard is a Marie Curie Fellow at Human Rights Studies at Lund University and an incoming Senior Researcher at the Danish Institute for International Studies. Previously, he was a postdoc at Georgetown University. He is the author of Reagan, Congress, and Human Rights: Contesting Morality in US Foreign Policy (Cambridge University Press, 2020) and several articles in journals such as Journal of Cold War Studies, Diplomacy & Statecraft, and International Politics.

Nicole Anslover is the author of Harry S. Truman: The Coming of the Cold War as well as several peer-reviewed articles and book chapters. Her research interests are modern American history, focusing on international relations and the modern presidency. Her forthcoming book, Trouble with the Transition: The Transfer of Power Between Presidential Administrations, offers a look at some of the most significant transition periods in the last century.

William Knoblauch is currently an Associate Professor of History at Finlandia University (Hancock, MI, USA). He is author of Nuclear Freeze in a Cold War: The Reagan Administration, Cultural Activism, and the End of the Arms Race (University of Massachusetts Press, 2016) and co-editor of The Routledge History of World Peace since 1750 (2018).

Atalie Gerhard is a doctoral researcher in the International Research Training Group “Diversity: Mediations of Difference in Transcultural Spaces” at Saarland University. Her research interests include narratives of containment, cultural minority resistance and identity negotiation. She holds an M.A. in North American Studies as well as a B.A. degree in English and American and French Studies from the Friedrich-Alexander-University of Erlangen-Nuremberg. In Bavaria, her volunteer work in a refugee shelter has received state recognition.

Antje Dallmann serves as associated professor (Privatdozentin) at Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin. In her second book, she discusses medical romance in nineteenth-century US-America, while her dissertation investigates modern and postmodern city novels. Her interests also include intersectional approaches to research in American politics and fictional narration and family studies.

Erika Cornelius Smith is an associate professor of political science and international business, and the founder of the Civic Leadership and Politics program at Nichols College. She holds graduate degrees in political science, history, and women’s and gender studies from Eastern Illinois University and Purdue University. Her research focuses on women and politics, political ambition, and the American presidency.

Raffaella Baritono is Professor of U.S. History and Politics at the University of Bologna, Department of Political and Social Sciences. She is member of the editorial boards of “Ricerche di Storia Politica”, “Scienza & Politica” and of the journal of political debate “Il Mulino”. She has published extensively on American political history and thought. Among her recent works: Smart Government vs. Deep State: State and Nation, Delegitimization and Political Vision, in Barack Obama and Donald Trump’s Presidential Speeches, in The New Language of American Democracy, ed. Ugo Rubeo, “Costellazioni”, a. III, n. 8, 2019, pp. 15-34; “Mrs. Roosevelt Goes on Tour:” Eleanor Roosevelt’s Soft-Diplomacy during World War II, in D. Fazzi and A. Luscombe, (eds.), The Global Citizen: Eleanor Roosevelt’s Views on Diplomacy and Democracy (New York: Palgrave, 2020).

Magne Dypedahl is an Associate Professor of English and American Studies at the University of South-Eastern Norway. He has a master’s degree in American Studies from Washington State University and a Cand. Philol degree with specialization in American Studies from the University of Oslo. He is the co-editor and co-author of numerous anthologies and books on intercultural competence and the teaching of English and culture.

Anne Mørk holds a PhD in American Studies from the University of Southern Denmark. Her research focuses on civic engagement, volunteerism, American political parties, and the American presidency. She has mainly published on the interaction between the public and the political leaders in shaping ideas of democracy and citizenship. She can be reached at annemork1507@gmail.com.

Thomas J. Cobb is currently an academic writing tutor at Coventry University, UK and has recently tutored American and Canadian studies modules at the University of Birmingham. His monograph, American Cinema and Cultural Diplomacy (2020, Palgrave Macmillan), based on his PhD thesis, explores how Hollywood films can be used as a tool for understanding contradictions in American foreign policy and International Relations theory. Cobb has an avid interest in US electoral history.