Despite stresses, 438th couple glad to be together

Sgts. Jennifer and Ryan Burrow, National Guard soldiers assigned to Murray's 438th Military Police Company, work side by side at Camp Ramadi, Iraq, providing security for fellow soldiers. The couple say having a spouse assigned with you in a combat zone is both worrisome and comforting.

By TOM BERRY
Staff Writer

In a combat zone, it's always comforting for a soldier to know that his buddy is protecting his back. But it is more — or less — comfortable knowing that your "buddy" is your husband or your wife.

That's the dilemma for Sgts. Jennifer and Ryan Burrow of Murray's 438th Military Police Co. The couple are assigned to the same duty station at Camp Ramadi, Iraq, during deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom. The couple work together on rotating shifts providing security at the camp.

Ryan, 20, a Paducah native who serves as operations sergeant for the unit, says despite being concerned for his spouse's safety in a war zone, he's glad to have her around.

"Individually, we rotate through the posts, so our jobs vary slightly," Ryan said via e-mail. "I am very thankful that I get the privilege of serving my country with my wife by my side."

When he's not dressed out for combat and carrying an M-16 for the Kentucky National Guard, Ryan is a cell phone sales representative for Wal-Mart in Murray. A graduate of Heath High School in Paducah, he is also currently a student at Murray State University where he intends to return following the unit's one-year deployment.

Jennifer, 24, a Paris, Tenn. native and graduate of Henry County (Tenn.) High School, is also a student at MSU. Back home, she's a customer service manager at the same Wal-Mart store. She also says she's glad to have her spouse close at hand.

"I'm grateful that I get to be able to serve with my significant other. It's a little more stressful, but I'm glad he is here," she said.

Having a loved one with you in a combat zone can increase concerns about their being hurt or killed. The kind of war Americans are fighting in Iraq doesn't have a front line and danger is ever present.

"There is a lot of added stress when being here, but we are both thankful that we get to see each other daily," Ryan said. "There is no one that I can trust more to have my back, both on a personal level and as a fellow soldier, than my wife."

For Jennifer, the situation also has both negative and positive aspects.

"It's positive always having the person around to talk to when you have a bad day, knowing that person has your back at all times," she said. "It's negative (with) all the extra stress that comes with being back at all times." Not only do you worry about your soldiers (and) yourself, but also the person you share everything with."

The couple met at the 438th after graduating basic training in January 2006. Their paths crossed very often between

McConnell touts new energy plan

DANVILLE, Ky. — Energy issues stayed at the forefront of Kentucky's U.S. Senate race Friday as Republican incumbent Mitch McConnell set forth his energy plan as a way to cut oil imports in half and his campaign released an ad attacking his Democratic opponent on the issue.

McConnell, the Senate's top-ranking Republican, promoted his proposal to boost energy production as well as conservation in a speech to the Danville Rotary Club.

It came on the same day his campaign released a new TV commercial in a continuing battle between McConnell and Democratic challenger Bruce Lunsford to gain the political high ground in the energy debate. The McConnell spot said the senator is leading the push for more oil exploration and accused Lunsford of resisting expansion of offshore drilling.

Lunsford's campaign fired back with a release saying the Democrat supports more domestic oil production, including offshore drilling in places currently off-limits.

"McConnell once again misrepresents Bruce Lunsford's position on the issues to cover up his long record of failure when it comes to lowering gas prices," Lunsford's campaign said.

The McConnell ad came a day after Lunsford unleashed his harshest attack yet on McConnell, saying the incumbent is the "master" of Washington's insider system. The ad says McConnell helped oil companies get huge tax breaks while receiving millions in campaign donations.

McConnell has been pitching his energy plan while touring Kentucky during Congress' late-summer break in Danville, the four-term senator said the proposal would eventually cut U.S. oil imports in half while boosting domestic production and lowering consumption.

The measure would, he states, seek to lift the federal offshore drilling moratorium off their coasts. McConnell said countries such as Norway and Britain with strong environmental credentials allow offshore drilling, while the U.S. prevents drilling off most of its coasts.

"It makes no sense to have an off-limits sign on 85 percent of the Outer Continental Shelf," McConnell said.

The McConnell-backed plan also would provide incentives to develop plug-in electric hybrid automobiles and lift a ban on developing oil shale in the West. In his speech, McConnell also suggested nuclear energy and development of coal-to-liquid fuels as part of the energy equation.

When you hear anybody say there is one solution to this, they are spinning you," McConnell said. "We have to do absolutely everything."

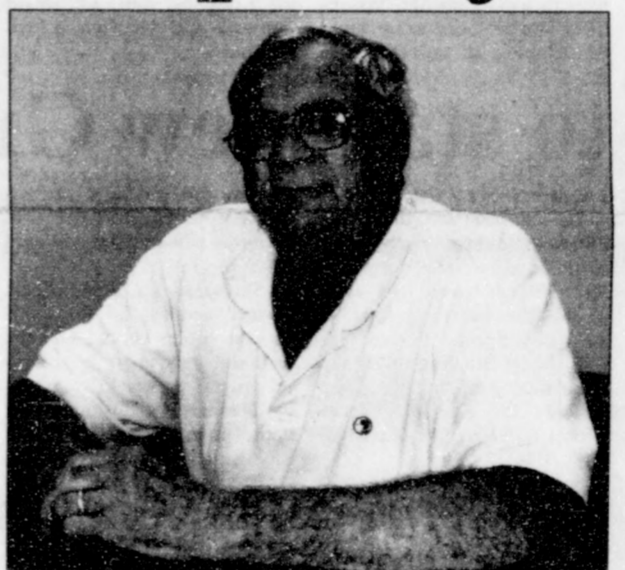

Lunsford spokesman Cary Stemple said McConnell has been a supporter of oil interests.

"What he doesn't discuss is the billions of dollars in tax breaks that got doled out to his friends from Big Oil," Stemple said.

Lunsford has said his energy plan includes opening the nation's strategic petroleum reserve, providing a gas-tax holiday and tapping oil shale supplies as well as additional drilling. He also supports developing alternative energy and converting coal into fuel.

"They call you 'Papa' and it's just something that gets you. It would do everybody good to make a trip somewhere to help others and realize just how good America is."

Trips of a Lifetime

By GREG TRAVIS
Staff Writer

Walter Steely has a heart for helping others and he is spending his life doing just that.

At 68, Steely has spent most of his life in agriculture, now he finds most of his time is spent thinking about traveling to the Ukraine to help children in the eastern European country.

"I started going to the Ukraine around six years ago," he said. "The trips started out as singing schools — teaching four-part harmony. That led to going into Bible camps and meetings."

He said a Florida couple he knows got interested in helping the orphans of the country and started taking clothes and shoes and performing humanitarian aid for several years.

"We have since been taking a little bit of everything. We get donations from all over the country as a result of our Web site ('His Kids Too!' at www.hiskidstoo.org.)"

According to the site, it is "committed to sharing the love of Jesus Christ with orphans in the Ukraine by providing humanitarian aid, health care and educational opportunities," and has been serving orphans across the globe "since 1985."

"Once I go over there and help those children, I immediately start thinking about how quickly are we going back?"

He said it was a 36-hour flight from Nashville to New York to Kiev. "From Kiev, we then travel inland."

Steely said friends and church members at the Glendale Road Church of Christ were currently working to box coats, book bags and back packs to be shipped. He said they also include health-care items such as shampoo, soap, toothbrushes and school supplies.

"We ship a lot of items over there and put them in place when we get there," he said. "Christmas boxes coming up soon, too. We will use some of the same type items, plus small toys, gloves, toboggans, socks, etc."

Steely noted that he and the others workers with orphanages in the Ukraine to help guarantee that all of the items get to those in need.

"The Ukraine still has a lot of old communists. We try to unpack everything when we ship it, so it's not as readily resellable on the street. We work with approximately 20 orphanages and orphanage hospitals.

Walter Steely, left and above, center, works with ladies at Glendale Road Church of Christ to box items to be shipped

There are 4,000 to 5,000 orphans and, although we try, we can't serve them all."

He said they work children from newborns to 18 years of age. "We are seeing a lesser amount of babies because so many children are now being adopted. But we are seeing more young men and women on the streets."

Steely noted that in the Ukraine it was a disgrace to have a deformed child and many of those children were left on the streets or at a hospital.

"At four years of age children are put into the orphanage system."

He said the deformed were sent to a "death house."

"Hopefully that is changing. We are working to get them adopted," he said. "As for the older ones, at 18 years-of-age they have to go to a technical school or go on the street."

"Eighty percent of the girls will become prostitutes and 90 percent of the boys will become thieves. No living skills are taught to them while they are in school."

He noted that he and others were also looking at ways to provide a home for six-months

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Rep. Ben Chandler, who got a firsthand look at the situation in Iraq last weekend, said U.S. troop withdrawals should begin right away to force the Iraqi government to stand on its own.

Chandler said a surge of an additional 20,000 troops last year, which he spoke against until the next president takes office in January. Jon Larson, Chandler's Republican opponent in the upcoming 6th District election, said the United States must be more patient with an Iraqi government that's still "finding its way."

Chandler acknowledged any such shift in policy is unlikely until the next president takes office in January. Jon Larson, Chandler's Republican opponent in the upcoming 6th District election, said the United States must be more patient with an Iraqi government that's still "finding its way."

Jennifer said she would be more than willing to put away her M-16, BDUs (battle dress uniform) and MREs (meals ready to eat) to raise children. "I don't want to sacrifice having a family for a career," she said. "Family is always there, a career is not. I've paid my dues, now it's time to start a family. But no one can ever really know how things will turn out till the time comes."

Both Jennifer and Ryan said soldiers with the 438th are thankful for all the support they get from back home. "We are looking forward to getting home to see our families and friends," Ryan said.

Western Kentucky University investigating prof. handling of grant

BOWLING GREEN, Ky. (AP) — Western Kentucky University is investigating the handling of federal grant money by a professor, who has resigned. An attorney for the university told The (Bowling Green) Daily News that Dr. Katrina Phelps is the only person under scrutiny. Phelps headed a center for at-risk youth under a $4.8 million federal grant. University officials said the spending of at least $33,000 of that money has been called into question.

stepped down to enter the senior judge program. The appointment lasts until the Nov. 4 general election. So far, Scorsone is the only person to file papers to run in the election. The deadline to file is Aug. 12.

Scorsone is a lawyer from Lexington who served 12 years in the state House and 12 years in the state Senate. The Democratic lawmaker recently withdrew his name to run again for the Senate.

Indiana collector indicted in Transylvania theft

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — A federal grand jury in Lexington has indicted an Indiana collector of Jefferson Davis artifacts, accusing him of stealing documents from Transylvania University. The Lexington Herald-Leader reported the indictments were returned on Thursday. Eugene C. Zollman of LaPorte, Ind., was investigated after he allegedly tried to sell letters and other items written by Davis in an online auction. A Jefferson Davis scholar at Rice University saw items and notified Transylvania officials, who called police. Lexington attorney Mark Wohlander represents Zollman and told The Associated Press on Friday that Zollman isn't responsible for the conduct set forth in the indictment. Wohlander said his client will be arraigned on Aug. 13.

Chandler calls for troop pullout from Iraq

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Rep. Ben Chandler, who got a firsthand look at the situation in Iraq last weekend, said U.S. troop withdrawals should begin right away to force the Iraqi government to stand on its own. "I think we need to leave them with as stable a situation as we can but we need to lift off from the country as soon as possible," the Democratic congressman told the Lexington Herald-Leader in an interview. "I think it's time to start withdrawing."

Chandler said he's increasingly concerned with the mounting cost of U.S. occupation and reconstruction of Iraq, which works out to roughly $330 million per day. "It's a shocking amount of money and at a time when we're concerned about our ability to compete in a global economy," he said. Republican U.S. Rep. Hal Rogers, R-Ky., who sits with Chandler on the House appropriations committee, said he also has been concerned about the Iraqi government's "progression towards political stability, financial accountability, and meeting the training milestones for their own military." But he said removing U.S. forces too soon could cause disarray that would encourage violence and terrorism.

Fort Campbell to start new Green Beret unit

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. (AP) — Fort Campbell has a new Green Beret battalion, which is standing up in the first phase of a major expansion of Special Forces units over the next several years. Brig. Gen. Michael Repass calls the creation of a new battalion of the 5th Special Forces Group a historic event. The general who commands Army Special Forces spoke to reporters after a ceremony Friday for the new unit.

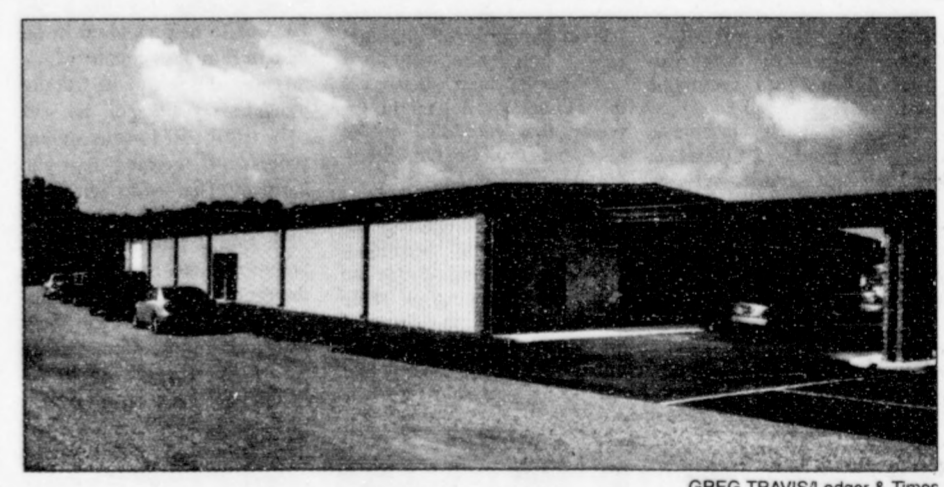

The 5th Group, whose geographical focus includes the Middle East, was among the first on the ground in Afghanistan after Sept. 11, 2001. It has since shifted its operation to Iraq, but Repass said the special forces unit will still be needed in Iraq even if there is a troop drawback. "As long as our nation is committed to operations there, we will have special forces units there," Repass said. Repass said recruiting has increased in order to supply the five planned new battalions with soldiers. "We're the kind of organization that attracts people. We create about 750 Green Berets each year for the past two years," Repass said.

Beshear appoints longtime judge to Ky. high court

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Daniel J. Venters, who spent nearly a quarter-century as a judge in southern Kentucky, was appointed to the state Supreme Court on Friday by Gov. Steve Beshear. Venters, 58, left the bench in 2003 and has been in private practice in Somerset.

He succeeds former Chief Justice Joseph Lambert, who retired. The appointment lasts until the upcoming November election, but Venters said Friday in an interview that he will be a candidate to fill the remaining two years of the term in the Third Supreme Court District. "I intend to pursue an aggressive and vigorous campaign," he said. Venters said he was "pleasantly surprised" by the appointment. "I'm honored by all the bipartisan support that led to this appointment," he said. He said that local Democrats in heavily Republican Pulaski County had been among those encouraging his appointment by the governor. Beshear, a Democrat, predicted that Venters will be an outstanding Supreme Court judge. "He has served with distinction at every level of the legal system — as a private attorney, a prosecutor and as a judge," Beshear said.

Steely said other churches were also helping the program with finances. "Helping them — it's been something under my skin. I can't let go. I live for one trip to the next. I'm on the phone recruiting others or looking for something we need. Every trip I come back with more needs." He said he travels to the Ukraine twice a year and will soon be returning. "I am about as happy over there as I am here. I don't go to have a good time, but when I pick up a child and it makes him/her smile, it's something else. Steely said the church's new service building will serve as a hub for benevolence efforts, disaster relief, a clothing and food bank and more. He reported that currently there is a need for medical people to go into the schools and teach hygiene and abstinence. "We need doctors, nurses and educators — people who can give the children over there an idea of what will take place when they have a baby."

U.S. urges calm in South Ossetia

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States called Friday for an immediate cease-fire in a conflict between Russia and Georgia over the breakaway province of South Ossetia.

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice has spoken to Russian and Georgian parties involved and was urging an end to the fighting. Department spokesman Mark Toner told reporters that the United States was also sending an envoy to the region Friday to meet with the parties involved to try to end the fighting. U.S. officials said the envoy was Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Matthew Soberg-Shieff, a specialist on the region.

"We support Georgia's territorial integrity," Gallegos said. "We are working on media efforts to secure a cease-fire." The scramble by U.S. diplomats came as Georgian troops launched a major military offensive to regain control over South Ossetia. The fighting prompted a furious response from Russia, which vowed retaliation and sent a column of tanks into the region.

It was the worst outbreak of hostilities since the province declared de facto independence in 2008 that ended in 1992. Russian military officer Alexander Lebed said 10 Russian peacekeepers were killed and 30 wounded in their barracks were hit by Georgian shelling. Russia has about 130 troops in Georgia, including a few dozen civilians who are all working to prepare the Georgian forces for their next deployment to Iraq. All of those U.S. trainers, he said, have been accounted for, none has been injured, and there are no plans to pull them out of the country.

Iraqi Cleric Muqtada al-Sadr reorganizes militia

BAGHDAD (AP) — Shiite cleric Muqtada al-Sadr ordered most of his militiamen to disarm but said Friday he will maintain elite fighting units to resist the Americans if a timetable for the withdrawal of U.S. troops is not established.

Fighters in the Sunni-led insurgency, meanwhile, set off a car bomb at a market in the northern city of Tal Afar, killing 18 people and wounding 25, Iraqi police said. It was the latest in a series of deadly attacks seeking to chip away at recent security gains.

Al-Sadr's statement — read to worshippers during Friday prayers in Baghdad's former militia stronghold of Sadr City — was in line with details revealed earlier this week and appeared to be an extension of plans he announced in June aimed at asserting more control over the militia.

"Weapons are to be exclusively in the hands of one group, the resistance group," while another group called Momahidoun is to focus on social, religious and community work, Sadr cleric Mufahar al-Moussawi said.

He said the announcement was particularly aimed at members of al-Sadr's Mahdi Army militia, which has been blamed for some of the worst violence against American troops and rival Sunni Arabs.

Thousands of worshippers streamed out into the streets after the Islamic service, burning an American flag and shouting: "No, no to America. No, no to occupation."

The cleric has linked the reorganization of the Mahdi Army to U.S.-Iraqi negotiations over a long-term agreement that would extend the American presence in Iraq after a U.N. mandate expires at the end of the year. Al-Sadr and his followers want the deal to include a timeframe for an American withdrawal and have warned they may not suspend operations without such a clause.

Several cease-fires by al-Sadr have been key to a sharp decline in violence over the past year, along with a Sunni revolt against al-Qaida in Iraq and a U.S. troop buildup. But American officials still consider his militiamen a threat and have backed the Iraqi military in operations to try to oust them from their power bases in Baghdad and elsewhere in Iraq.

The fighting cells will be "small and limited" and will only launch attacks under direct orders from al-Sadr in case of "dire necessity," the cleric's spokesman, Sheik Salah al-Obeidi, told The Associated Press in the holy city of Najaf.

He also ruled out attacks on Iraqis. "Now our stance is to watch the political developments and the security agreement. We will see if there will be a withdrawal timetable or not. We will wait for the results. These cells have not yet conducted any operations," he added.

Two Iraqi officials close to Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki have said government and U.S. negotiators are near an agreement on all American combat troops leaving Iraq by October 2010, with the last soldiers out three years after that. The officials all spoke on condition of anonymity because the talks were still under way.

U.S. officials, however, insisted no dates had been agreed.

 Shiite Muslim worshippers, one wearing a t-shirt showing anti-U.S. Cleric Muqtada al-Sadr, and his late father Grand Ayatollah Mohammed Sadiq al-Sadr, left, and writing in Arabic reading "Here I am, Oh Imam Hussein" give prayers Friday in the Sadr City district of Baghdad.

"It's premature to say what the aspiration goals and time horizons are going to be," and a date for troop withdrawals will not be "plucked out of thin air," White House press secretary Dana Perino said, speaking to reporters in Beijing on Friday where President Bush is attending the Olympics.

Throughout the conflict, Bush steadfastly refused to accept any timetable for bringing U.S. troops home. Last month, however, Bush and al-Maliki agreed to set a "general time horizon" for ending the U.S. mission.

The car bomb in Tal Afar exploded by a food market about 6:30 p.m., when the area was crowded with shoppers, a senior police official in the nearby city of Mosul said. A security official in Tal Afar said the blast came less than 30 minutes after the expiration of a regular Friday ban on vehicles designed to prevent bombers from targeting weekly mosque services.

Both officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity because they weren't authorized to release the information, gave the casualty toll as 18 dead and 25 wounded. The U.S. military confirmed the attack but said initial reports indicated 15 people were killed and 50 wounded.

Tal Afar, a predominantly Shiite Turkomen city 260 miles northwest of Baghdad, also was hit by a car bombing July 16 that killed at least 18 people, including seven children.

U.S.-Iraqi military operations are currently under way pursuing al-Qaida in Iraq fighters and other insurgents in Mosul and elsewhere in the north.

Ethnic tensions also have been rising between Turkomen, Arabs and Kurds in that region over the status of the oil city of Kirkuk.

Kurdish leader Massoud al-Barzani visited Kirkuk on Friday and called for the rival factions "to have an open dialogue" to resolve their disagreement over sharing control of the city. His appeal came two days after the dispute blocked passage of a provincial elections law, casting doubt on whether U.S.-backed balloting can be held this year in Iraq's 18 provinces. The bill failed because the sides were unable to come to agree on a power-sharing deal for the region around Kirkuk, the center of Iraq's northern oil fields. Kurds consider Kirkuk their ancestral capital and want to incorporate it into their self-ruled region in the north. Most Arabs and Turkomen want Kirkuk to remain under central government control.

In Washington, the State Department expressed irritation that the parliament had gone into summer recess without having reached a compromise on the matter.

"The status of Kirkuk is indeed a sensitive issue that needs to be addressed in a serious fashion, but it is an issue that cannot be solved through the legislative mechanism of the election law," spokesman Gonzalo Gallegos said. "The election law should not be held hostage to that problem."

Exploring identity theft

It used to be enough for financial planners to help clients minimize losses by making them aware of the risks inherent in various financial assets—even securities backed by the U.S. Treasury—and by steering them away from imprudent asset allocation and unsuitable investments.

If these seemed like challenges, they were relatively easy to defend against when compared with the potential for losses of money and credit standing which virtually anyone may face today when Social Security numbers or other personal data fall into the hands of criminals and are used for illegal gains at their owners' expense.

"Identity theft" is, to boil down the definition of the 1998 law that made it a federal criminal offense, the unauthorized transfer or use of "a means of identification of another person with the intent to commit...any activity (which violates federal, state, or local law)."

It can result in losses of money and reputation which may not be discovered for weeks and which may require more time, at possibly significant costs, to recover, if possible at all.

Increasingly vulnerable to such dire circumstances, clients of financial planners have much to do to help themselves, of course, but would surely welcome advice from planners going beyond their traditional responsibilities when opportunities arise.

To help clients to be protected against identity theft, it is important for them to have a sense of the many ways in which it may occur.

Incidents typically involve the unauthorized use of Social Security, bank account, credit card, charge account, driver's license, and telephone calling card numbers; Personal Identification Numbers (PINs), user IDs and passwords, whether unknowingly given to the wrong people or obtained in other ways. A mother's maiden name, a favorite pet's name, or the last four Social Security digits, which are often used to verify identity, are also subject to abuse.

They may be copied from plastic cards, statements (presumably including financial planners' statements), charge slips, or other documents. They may be discerned when criminals watch people punching numbers into ATMs or public telephones, or when they eavesdrop on people giving numbers over phones. They may be retrieved from discarded checks, statements, other records—or discarded forms sent with "pre-approved" credit cards, which are activated without the recipients' knowledge.

According to a U.S. Justice Department advisory on identity theft, the Internet has become an appealing place for criminals to obtain identifying data, such as passwords or banking information. Many people respond to unsolicited e-mail that promises them some benefit, but requests identifying data.

"With enough identifying information about an individual, a criminal can take over that individual's identity to conduct a wide range of crimes: for example, false applications for loans and credit cards, fraudulent withdrawals from bank accounts, fraudulent use of telephone calling cards, or obtaining other goods or privileges," says the Justice Department advisory.

Criminals' e-mails also "lure their targets into a false sense of security by hijacking the familiar, trusted logos of established, legitimate companies," says a Securities and Exchange Commission advisory.

Whatever the technique, illegally obtained personal information can result not only in withdrawals of money or in large debts but also in crimes that are traced to the victims. How can such incidents be minimized?

■ Do not give anyone—on the phone or Internet—a Social Security or other personal number unless sure that the request is legitimate.

■ Do not carry your Social Security card or number with you. If your state uses your Social Security number on your driver's license, ask them to change it to a random number.

■ Be cautious when pressing ATM or telephone buttons or dictating numbers on telephones in public.

■ Retrieve sales and charge slips, safely retain them, and shred them before discarding them.

■ Check statements for charge, bank, brokerage, and other accounts for unauthorized transactions, retain them, and shred them when they are no longer needed.

■ Shred unneeded cancelled checks and "pre-approved" credit card offers.

■ Delete unsolicited e-mails requesting information from firms you do not know, and verify—by phone, not by e-mail response—the legitimacy of those appearing to be from firms you know.

■ Log out when finished with a secure Web site before going to the next.

■ Consider using a lockable mailbox or a P.O. Box.

■ For optimum security, a cross-cut shredder should be used (not any shredder will do).

■ Contact the credit bureaus to opt out of solicitation credit offers via the mail.

■ Do not offer personal information over the phone, unless you initiated the call, and the number called is from a reliable source.

■ Make your computer safer. There are free programs that can do the trick. For a firewall, zonealarm (www.zonealarm.com) is free. For spyware, adaware (www.lavasoftusa.com) or spybot search and destroy (www.safer-networking.org) are both free. A firewall can keep intruders from pulling information from your hard drive. Spyware is necessary because there are spy programs that can track the Web sites you visit and track your keystrokes on those sites.

■ Also, do not carry a checkbook in your wallet or purse.

If identity theft occurs, notify:

■ The fraud department of one of the three major credit bureaus (Equifax, 800-525-6285; Experian, 888-397-3742; and Trans Union, 800-680-7289), the police (and obtain a copy of their report), and the Federal Trade Commission (877-4384338).

■ Postal Inspection Service, if an unauthorized change of address form has been filed to redirect mail.

■ Social Security Administration (800-269-0271), if a Social Security number has been fraudulently used.

■ Creditors and financial institutions, if fraudulent transactions are suspected.

Fishing with family always good for memories

I had the pleasure of fishing with kinfolks one morning in order to help them learn some new areas to catch and enjoy Kentucky Lake bass! They were also eager to use new lures which produce lots of strikes and if you are quick enough, catch the bass. We met with brother-in-law, Willie Jackson, and his three grandsons, Ben and Dan Jackson and Ryan Clendinning. They had been bluegill fishing this summer but I suggested they learn some techniques and lures to catch bass.

That was OK with them so we traveled down into Tennessee and made ready with the rods and lures. Of course, learning a new technique for catching bigger fish often takes time especially if the anglers are youngsters! It didn't take these boys long however! They were casting, reeling and catching bass as soon as the bass awakened. We were still in deep shadow areas along the shoreline because that is where the small shad baitfish had collected overnight! The hungry bass were beginning to move and feed as the boys were learning how to cast their lures into those schools! It was a riot, so many fish around us and the boys were casting so well, catching bass and letting them go to fight again another day! We were ready with the net at all times because someone had a bass on almost constantly!

I made photos as quickly as possible so as to not hinder that next cast.

We were all laughing and catching bass, letting them go and catching another at least a couple of hours! As the shad were eaten by the hundreds we could see a major slowing of the strikes and decided to relocate. It was another good spot and loaded with baitfish which didn't seem to be bothered yet.

As soon as we started the boys casting the action again heated up and everyone was laughing as they competed with each other! We could tell the heat was going to make a difference not necessarily with the fish but with our young anglers. We took a cold drink break and I think everyone was ready to call it a morning.

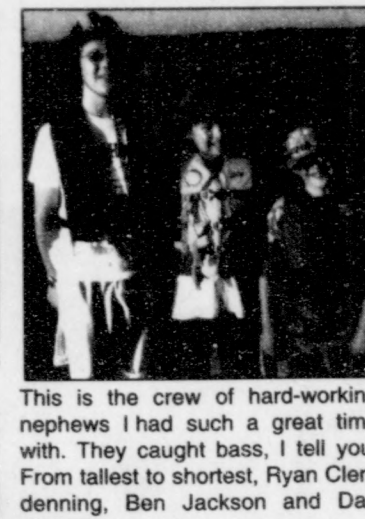

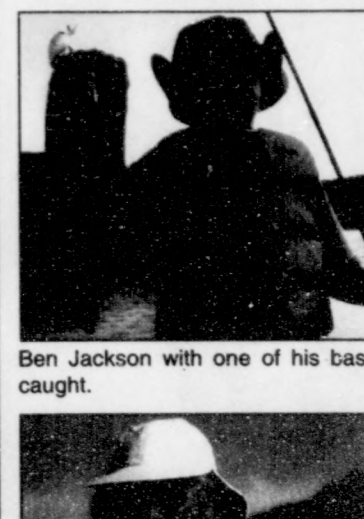

These young men had caught and released at least twenty bass, some of which were real nice legal size bass for the keeping. However, the guys chose to release all of the bass so maybe we can catch them again this fall! It was a great trip for me to see these young men enjoy the sport and art of bass fishing. We all had a good time and I must say thanks to the guys for being such nice young men!

My next trip out was with Joe and Amanda Lynch, long time friends from east central Kentucky. We did about the same thing in the early light in order to see what the fish were doing!

We wanted to locate and catch some strippers so they could take fish home to dine on! It took some looking but we located a source where the strippers were good size but not real large. It was a lot of casting and reeling on our part but slowly it began to pay off and we did manage a decent catch for Joe and Amanda to take home.

I have photos of Amanda on her first fishing trip and she couldn't have been over three years old. Now then, she can stand up and cast with a bait casting reel and rod and put her share of the fish in the livewell I want you to know!

It had been a year since she fished with me last and she mentioned that fact as we began to cast. I wasn't worried in the least. I simply made sure the reel was working properly and handed it to her. I said go get

them, you know how! That was never a problem the rest of the day, she made as many casts as Joe and I did and caught her share of the fish. The strippers were good size but not the really good seventeen or eighteen inch ones.

The current was very slow and this did not push the shad along fast enough to attract the big strippers. As we continued to fish, we knew that there would be enough to take home for a family meal but not enough for the neighbors! Thanks to these fine people for coming to see us! Maybe a couple of meals would be about right!

I was lucky enough to fish with my youngest daughter Lesa and granddaughters Samantha and Sarah on Monday. It was a little cooler on the water at first so we took to the moss and grass beds looking for bass. I don't think these girls had fished this way since last year so I wanted to see them have some fun.

We took to the grass casting soft plastics in the areas where the lily pads and grasses were pretty thick. It didn't take long to roust those bass, these girls can fish and all are adept with bait casting rods and reels!

We were using the soft plastics to cast into areas where there were little clearings close to the grass. I think Samantha caught the first bass and it was a nice one! We didn't want to take any out so all the pressure was off! All three girls cast so well there isn't anything for me to do except be ready with the net and keep the boat moving in good areas to fish.

Both Sarah and Lesa did catch bass so as not to be left out and I must say the fishing was tough! No current and the hot sun made us aware of no breeze either!

It was great to watch the girls choose their targets, cast and then catch a bass! Smiles were everywhere and I can tell you that makes for a good trip! I don't know who caught the most this time but our next trip isn't far off and we will tell you then how it went and who caught the largest bass.

Happy Fishing!

An existential apologetic on the need to hunt squirrels

Daylight begins to seep through the treetops as the morning's mist begins to glow. There are drips all around from the rain that fell sometime during the night. The leaves are silent underfoot thanks to the rain. There is no wind, just the heaviness of moist, sticky air.

A roar of water droplets erupt from the treetops somewhere out in the still, dark forest as a squirrel makes the morning's first leap, then another and another. Soon the sound of dripping water is replaced by the sharper sound of hard objects popping through the green leaves and bouncing on the ground. Through the quiet mist comes the sound of scraping, then the hard sound of gnawing.

It's opening day of squirrel season - the ideal opening day with a relatively cool morning, a woods dampened by rain, and hungry squirrels filling the treetops to feast on hickory nuts from the big shagbarks, poplar buds, and acorns. I have seen several mornings like this. It's not too much to ask.

Ahead is a hillside, or a ridge-top, or maybe a stretch of flat bottom land along a stream. If the timing is right and the hickory nuts are ripe, the squirrels will be there. It's a solitary pursuit, a practice of stealth and alert observation. All of the senses are brought into play - even the musty smell of the forest as it intoxicates the mind when blended with the aroma of a well-oiled gun.

There are deer and turkey in these woods now, new residents to this familiar world. Where hunters once trekked deep into the hollers and hillsides only in earliest autumn, a variety of paths now belie the influx of archers and riflemen from late summer until the coldest grip of winter, and the craftily hidden who stalk the wild turkey in early spring.

For a time I was caught in the grip of "big-game fever" and busied myself with preparations and other pursuits that would occupy my time until deer season dawned in November. But there was always a tugging from deep within, a longing for that special morning after a mid-night rain when you could follow a squirrel by following the sound of raindrops shaken from leaves, and locate the prey by listening for the tell-tale patter of hickory-nut hulls through the branches. It's an ancient tug coded somewhere in a tangle of genes that were shared by the first hunters.

They were good hunters, too. They had to have been good hunters as to survive long enough to bequeath this gift from across the great valley of the ages. Ask me why I hunt and that is my reply. That's why every trip into the big woods is still a magical affair; that's why I still stop to observe a squirrel in a backyard tree, a deer standing in a farmer's field, or a turkey strutting for his hens in a logging road.

The ancients had no choice to but to be the utmost opportunists, betting their survival against the best bounty available at any given time. Perhaps that is why we still long to pursue squirrels that fill the treetops of early autumn, or wait for the deer or the turkeys during the only seasons in which they are occupied with something that detracts from their natural wariness.

We, like those of old, are compelled to be the opportunists of our day.

I have made peace with the demands of the ancients, and will again walk on dampened leaves through the cool of an autumn morn in search of feeding squirrels as I did many years ago with my father. Before I climbed into the first deer stand or made the first rassy yelp on a turkey call, I hunted squirrels.

Maybe that's why the woods are so familiar or why patience in pursuit of game comes so easy. There are necessary "first steps" to everything we do in life. Good hunters are not born from instinct but are self-made thanks to the demand of the ancient genes that we walk into a dark wood and take those first steps.

It's from those steps that we learn to move with stealth, to watch for the slightest movement, or to listen for the faintest evidence of an approaching quarry, to become that "good" hunter.

If I am blessed enough to catch the glimpse of heavy-racked buck this winter, or afforded the opportunity to call to the mightiest tom on the hillside next spring, I will know that it was because I heeded the ancestral call on many an opening morning in a life-time of squirrel seasons.

Jug fishing, ATV arrests and magnificent binoculars...all in a day's work

Their office is on Kentucky Lake and they are the Kentucky Fish and Wildlife officers. On Sunday I interviewed two of them in their office.

In a nutshell, my day with them was freakin' awesome. I can assure you that the public has some very competent and caring individuals overseeing lake activities.

We started out putt-putting from the dock at Kenlake Marina.

Officer Brad Lowe was the driver. I sat next to him in the passenger seat. Before we started putting up speed, Officer Greg Youree explained that if I sat on the edge of the seat, bent my knees and hung onto the handle above me, I'd have more leverage. I didn't really believe him until we picked up speed and

I was bouncing about a foot off my spring-suspended seat. My feet couldn't touch the floor and the handle was too far away to grab. I couldn't hang onto the seat because, as Youree pointed out, if I did, I'd get my fingers smashed.

I briefly thought that I might be thrown off the boat. It didn't happen but if it had, what a great story.

When we slowed down, I assumed the official Fish and Wildlife boat-riding-stance. It worked wonderfully.

One thing that impressed me the most was how they checked everyone's lifejackets through the Magnificent Binoculars. Lowe said it's shocking how many kids are on the lake inner tubing, jet skiing, etc. without lifejackets. That's just a drowning waiting to happen.

The guys had been telling me about how they pick up littered items from the water so I wasn't surprised when Lowe pulled the boat beside what looked like an oil jug. Youree fished it out of the water and read a guy's name and phone number off it. I wondered why you would litter and leave your contact information on the thing you threw away.

If you're reading this and already know what it was, I apologize for my lack of knowledge. But if you're like me and had no idea why Youree put the jug back in the water, you, like me, are about to learn something new.

It's called jug-fishing. Attached to the jug was a line, a hook and bait. Fishermen put the jugs in the water and come back later to pick up the jugs and fish.

This leads me to the second thing I learned and that was limb-fishing. It's the same concept but the fishing line is tied to tree branches on shore.

We made a couple stops to check people's fishing licenses and boat safety equipment. Both of the officers I was with had an ability to make small talk with people, point out better fishing places and nod their heads when people told them their life stories.

Here's another thing I learned too.

We pulled up to a dock to check the license of a young boat-driver and the sunbathing wife sat up and says very snottily, "Have we done something wrong?"

When we drove away I was told it's usually the women who get an attitude. Imagine that.

Lowe banked the boat a couple times to go talk to people on shore. I was slightly concerned about the fact that I was left on the boat and the waves were lapping up against it.

I could just imagine them loosening me from the shore and then I'd have to improvise to learn how to drive the boat and circle back around to pick up Lowe and Youree.

Sometimes my imagination needs to rest.

The day got more exciting when Youree spotted ATVs on Wildlife Management Area land, which is where they are NOT supposed to be.

We started heading for shore and Youree, through his Magnificent Binoculars, saw the guys throw their beer cans in the bushes.

Lowe banked the boat and he and Youree got everyone to get off the four-wheelers (they were getting ready to drive off).

From that point, I sat on the boat drinking my water and eating a Rice Krispie treat while I watched the officers write citations and arrest one guy for alcohol intoxication.

If any of you remember the heat from last week, you'll understand what I mean when I say IT WAS HOT. I really thought about jumping in the water but I didn't want to cause a distraction while they worked.

Plus, I didn't want to miss anything.

It was like watching a good movie...live.

The guy they arrested was put on the boat and everyone else drove off with their citations in hand after having picked up all the trash as directed by Lowe.

We started away from shore but the guys realized that something was wrong with the boat. It wasn't making the right "tick-tick" noise.

They decided they had "spun a hub." I asked for an explanation. I got a really good one

RACER FALL CAMP

In Good Hands

MICHAEL DANN / Ledger & Times

DeAngelo Nelson was the Racers' second-leading receiver last season, hauling in 34 passes for 451 yards and three touchdowns. Only departed senior Rod Harper had more catches with 57 for 779 yards and 10 touchdowns. The two were nearly identical in average yards per catch with Nelson at 13.3 and Harper at 13.7. Suffice to say, with the loss of Harper, Nelson could be a prime candidate for bombs compliments of quarterback Jeff Ehrhardt upcoming season.

NELSON'S MITTS COULD MAKE MSU STRONG CONTENDER FOR CONFERENCE CROWN

By MICHAEL DANN
Sports Editor

It's amazing what a difference a year can make. Last year, DeAngelo Nelson caught 34 balls for 451 yards finished with three touchdowns. The year prior, his line read something like this: Three catches, four yards and one TD.

It's easy to see then why last year's stats earned the Racer junior out of Memphis' preseason All-OVC first-team tight end. This coming off the heels of earning post-season All-American last year. Then again, if you take into consideration that Nelson caught nearly three times as many catches as any other tight end in the league last year, people around the MSU camp aren't too surprised.

Head coach Matt Griffin is one of the guys who cited a "growth spurt" for Nelson's accomplishments last season.

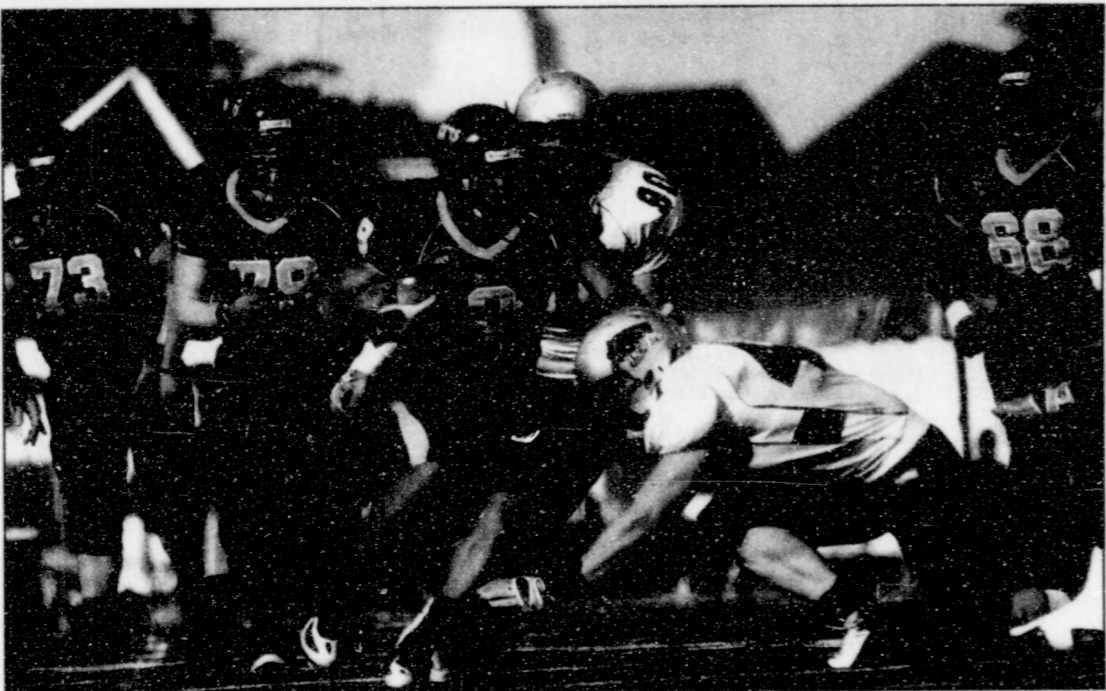

"DeAngelo is a great character," Griffin said. "He does it right all the time. He's a great student, great leader, just an incredible person."

The year before was his first year playing, really after redshirting his freshman year. The difference from year to the next is just his work ethic.

In 2007, Nelson appeared in all 11 games at tight end, leading the OVC in catches, yards and touchdowns at that position. Nelson averaged 13.3 yards a year ago, up from the 1.3 he averaged in 2006.

Aside from being named preseason OVC, Nelson also was named to first team by Phil Steele's annual preseason NCAA magazine.

Nelson was joined on that list by

MICHAEL DANN / Ledger & Times

DeAngelo Nelson had seven catches for 83 yards in last season's 27-24 loss to Eastern Illinois during Homecoming at Roy Stewart Stadium. Nelson's performance last season earned him All-OVC First-Team honors and then he was named to the preseason team this season.

Tamar Butler, Derrick Townsel, Charlie Jordan and Zach Kutch made the second team.

Looking to earn a degree in public relations, Nelson is well on his way.

When asked if he thought he would have a more impactful role on the team this season, Nelson knew all the right things to say.

"I will do anything they want me to do," he said. "If they feel like I should get the ball, then it's up to me to not disappoint them. Whatever the team needs to do to win, that's who we're going to put the ball in the hands of."

Nelson, one of the 21 juniors on this year's club, is in good company when looking for the winds of change to blow Murray State's way this year.

There is already something different in the air according to Nelson. Problem is, it's something he can't pinpoint.

"We came into camp with a different mindset," Nelson added. "Just like every year, we want to win. We're ready to get in there, compete, battle, fight and do whatever we have to do to win a championship this year."

ON MONDAY

DeAngelo Nelson wasn't the only Racer to receive preseason honors by the OVC. Fellow junior Austen Lane was named to the First-Team Defense. Lane says most of his motivation this season will be silencing critics wrong about the preseason ranking of the Racers at No. 8. Lane and the Racers have different aspirations and are proving it on the practice field.

LAKER VOLLEYBALL PREVIEW

10 RETURNEES HOPT TO TAKE LADY LAKERS TO 4TH DISTRICT TITLE

By TOMMY DILLARD
Sports Writer

Former head coach Cassidy Palmer set the foundation for volleyball at Calloway County, now it's up to first-year Lady Laker boss Samantha Hobbs to take the program to the next level.

Palmer was the longest tenured coach in the short history of the program, manning the bench at Jeffrey Gymnasium for three years. But this summer, she turned over the program to Hobbs, a former Murray State rower and world civilizations teacher at CCHS.

Though she hasn't played or coached volleyball prior to this summer, she's spent the last few months researching the sport and seeking tutelage from Palmer and Murray State head coach David Schwepker.

It's been a learning experience for both her and the squad, Hobbs said, but it's one through which the two parties have grown closer together.

"The girls have showed quite a bit of respect but also, when I've struggled and had questions, they've also helped me out," she said.

Inexperience and lack of height were two problems that plagued the Lady Lakers during last season's 14-15 campaign, and they're two issues that Hobbs inherits with the program.

The Lady Lakers return four seniors but also graduated several integral parts from last year's squad, including setter Teala Penick. Height will still be an issue.

Schwepker conducted a camp for the team in June, and Hobbs says she's seen progress over the summer, especially in her rising seniors.

Outside hitter Jacquelyn Price, middle hitter Kristen Phillips and back row players Katie Bazzell and Nissa Dunn will anchor a squad attempting to break into the regional tournament for the first time in the history of the program.

It will be a tall order, as traditional district powers Marshall County and Christian Fellowship as well as a veteran Murray squad all have designs on a district championship themselves.

BLANCO BLASTS LINER WITH BASES LOADED TO GIVE CUBS DIVISIONAL VICTORY

By RICK GANO
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Henry Blanco singled home the winning run with the bases loaded in the 11th inning, and the Chicago Cubs beat the St. Louis Cardinals 3-2 Friday to keep up their domination this season at Wrigley Field.

Chicago improved to an NL-best 44-16 at home, matching its Wrigley victory total from last year.

Jim Edmonds, who spent eight seasons with the Cardinals before he was dealt last offseason, hit a pair of solo homers for the Cubs, connecting in the second and seventh innings off Braden Loper.

With the score 2-2, Derrek Lee drew a leadoff walk against Ryan Franklin (4-5) in the 11th and, running on a 3-2 pitch, took third on Aramis Ramirez's single to right center. Kosuke Fukudome was intentionally walked to load the bases.

Blanco, who entered in the 10th, lined a pitch over shortstop Cesar Izturis.

Bob Howry (5-4) pitched the 11th for the win.

Edmonds' stellar afternoon came on the Cardinals' first visit to Wrigley Field this season.

During Edmonds' return trip to St. Louis last month, Cardinals manager Tony La Russa was miffed about Edmonds' comments that he was happy to be with the Cubs and tired of talking about his past.

Edmonds responded by saying La Russa ducked him before the first game of that series.

Stingers Finish Season in Style

Special to the Ledger

The 8u Murray Stingers baseball team concluded their successful debut season with a 4-1 record and their third tournament title in last weekend's Back to School Bash in Draffenville.

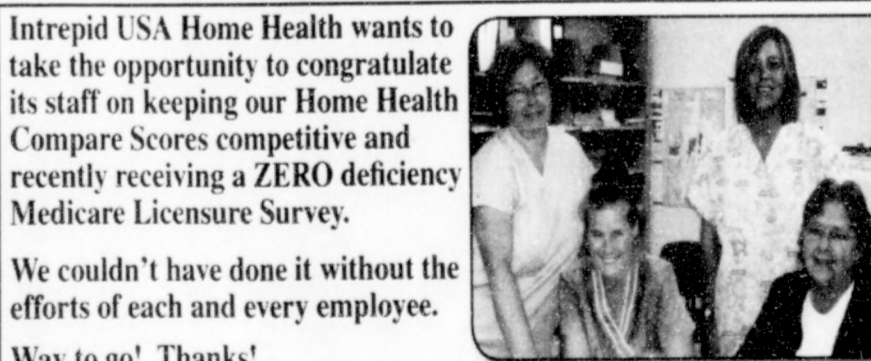

The weekend got started slowly, however, as Murray struggled to get past the Evansville All-Stars, 6-3, in the Friday night opener, and then dropped a 9-3 decision to the Newburgh (Ind.) Blue Streak later that evening. Needing a win Saturday to advance to the semifinals, the Stingers survived the sweltering heat to defeat the Heritage (Tenn.) Hurricanes, 8-2.

In Sunday's semifinal match-up, Murray came through with one of its finest overall efforts of the season and buzzed their way past the Mt. Washington (Ky.) Mudcats, 9-1, setting up the finale with the Bootheel (Mo.) Blaze. Avenging three earlier losses to the Sikeston, Mo., team, the Stingers used a 7-run fourth inning explosion to build a lead that eventually reached six runs. A furious rally by the Blaze cut the lead to two in the final inning, and with the potential tying and winning runs on base, the Stingers finally extinguished the Blaze, claiming a 12-10 win for the championship.

Season highlights for the Stingers:

- 30-16-1 Final Record
- 3 Tournament Championships (Pepsi Slam, Freedom Fest, Back to School Bash)
- 2 Tournament Runners-Up (West Kentucky Invitational, USSSA State)
- 4th Place Finish (BPA Northern Zone World Series)
- 5th Place Finish (BPA State)

1900 — The first Davis Cup is held with the United States beating Britain, 3-0.
1938 — McLin Hanover, driven by Henry Thomas, wins the Hambletonian Stakes in straight heats.
1949 — Ezzard Charles knocks out Gus Lesanovich in the eighth round at Yankee Stadium in his first world heavyweight title defense.
1949 — Miss Tilly, driven by Fred Egan, wins the Hambletonian Stakes in straight heats.
1975 — Jack Nicklaus wins the PGA Championship for the fourth time with a two-stroke victory over Bruce Crampton and Tom Weiskopf.
1980 — Jack Nicklaus wins his fifth PGA Championship with a record score of 274, seven strokes ahead of Andy Bean.
1995 — Gwen Torrence, the 100-meter champion at the World Championships, wins the 200 meters, then is disqualified for running out of her lane.

1995 — Michael Bradley, a third-year pro without a tour victory, shoots a record-tying 63 in his first PGA round to lead the PGA Championship.
1996 — Cigar's bid for a 17th straight victory ends when long shot Dare and Go passes the super horse in the upper stretch and pulls away to win the Pacific Classic at Del Mar. Cigar, 3 1/2 lengths behind Dare and Go, fails to break a tie with Citation for the record winning streak by a North American-based horse this century.
2002 — Pat Day breaks the career money record for a jockey, riding With Anticipation to victory in the $500,000 Sword Dancer Handicap at the Saratoga (N.Y.) Race Course. With the $300,000 in prize money, Day's horses have earned $264,580,968 in his 29-year career. Chris McCarron, who retired last month, had the previous record of $264,351,679.
2007 — Tiger Woods matches the major championship record with a 63 in the PGA Championship. Woods misses a 15-foot birdie putt on the final hole that would have given him the record.

Hobbs will lean on the four seniors for leadership both on the court and off.

"I've had quite a few of them step up," she said. "The goal this year is not only to do well but to come together as a team. In the past, they've had issues coming together and I've seen the seniors step up and come up with after practice activities to work on teamwork."

Joining Price at outside hitter is freshman Lexie Watson, who will also see time on the right side along with Emily McKnight. Sophomore Katlyn Knight will accompany Phillips in the middle.

After seeing sparse time at the position last year, junior Britnee Deitz will play her first full season at libero.

The Lady Lakers' biggest hole to fill is at setter. According to Hobbs, there are as many as five players who could see time at the integral position. She hopes to settle on a two-setter combo, which could include Dunn, junior Leanne Luther or freshman Allison Rogers.

"Losing some of those seniors as far as setters, that's where we're looking for a few of them to step up," Hobbs said. "I don't think I have one strong setter, so we'll probably keep with two for most of the year."

Penick has been assisting with the group of potential setters during certain practices this summer.

The primary focus during practices has been on hitting and passing, Hobbs said, though one skill hasn't quite caught up with the other.

"I would love to say hitting is our biggest strength," she said. "I guess it would be our strongest area, but it's hard to have great hitting when your passing struggles."

Hobbs and the squad have set a goal of reaching the district championship game, which would give them an automatic bid to the First Region tournament.

It's admittedly not the loftiest of goals, but it would be a first for the program, Hobbs said.

"It seems like a small goal, but for an upcoming program, it's a major one, especially when you're going against teams like Murray and Marshall."

HOROSCOPES

CAPRICORN
December 22-
January 19
Hey, Capricorn. A cause close to your heart is in need. Reach out to them. A friend receives good news. Be happy for them and squelch all pangs of envy.

AQUARIUS
January 20-
February 18
Life gets to be a bit too much and you must take a breather. Get away from it all. Aquarius, and take a short trip. Inner peace is sorely needed.

PISCES
February 19-
March 20
One last push and you will finally reach a personal goal. Go, Pisces, go! Unusual words of advice send you on the path of self-examination.

ARIES
March 21-
April 19
Nothing is what it seems this week, so take everything with a grain of salt, Aries. Double-check facts and figures.

Taurus
April 20-
May 20
Acting on impulse is not recommended this week. Taurus. Approach matters with caution and move slowly. A problem is brewing.

GEMINI
May 21-
June 21
Temper, temper. Irritations multiply quickly, and you must find some way to let off steam. A meeting at work will go smoothly with the right work.

CANCER
June 22-
July 22
Easy. Cancer. Compassion is what's needed at home to resolve a recurring dilemma. The green light for a project at work is granted.

LEO
July 23-
August 22
Continue burning the candle at both ends, Leo, and eventually you will burn out. Curb your activities and carve out some time for yourself.

VIRGO
August 23-
September 22
The appetite for success increases, but you must work your way to the top with care, Virgo. This is not the time to step on toes and break the rules.

LIBRA
September 23-
October 22
Confidence is at an all-time high. Dream big and aim high, Libra. A romantic endeavor pays off in a huge way. A night on the town is in order.

SCORPIO
October 23-
November 21
What starts out as a disappointing week ends up well indeed, Scorpio. Go ahead and splurge a little on yourself over the weekend.

SAGITTARIUS
November 22-
December 21
Snap out of it, Sagittarius. You've lived in the past too long. Take the plunge and try some gadgets. You just might like the conveniences they offer.
