ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY G. R. CRUMMER.

After completion of the chant over the death of their father Apopo, the two children continued their voyage to obtain helpers from Tahiti and the Island of Iva.

On reaching Tahiti they climbed a high tamanu tree called Pata, where they sent out their call for help from Tahitian volunteers. The people of Tahiti gladly accepted this call. They then proceeded to the island of Iva, met Airi their uncle, reported to him their case of the death of his elder brother Apopo, and asked for people to come to Rarotonga to have revenge for the killing of Apopo.

Immediately a messenger was sent by Airi to rouse people all over the islands to render help for fighting at Rarotonga, aiming at the killing of Apopo. Many canoes full of fighters from Tahiti and the island of Iva, sailed towards Rarotonga. They came through Ngatangia harbour, but unfortunately for them they were seen from a distance as they came into the bay. Apopo, who uprooted trees wholly as he saw the incoming canoes, threw them at these enemies, from the hilltop of Arerangi. So intense was the opposing rivalry that it would mean killing all the fighters entering the harbour. While Apopo was engaged at throwing trees seaward and killing all entering that way some Warriors called PUKURUMAATO-TOTO and PARAUKIKAU went by Titi-kaveka ascended the mountain and came by that manner to the hill where Apopo was so very busy facing seawards.

They disguised themselves by wearing women's clothing, so well, that when Apopo glanced at them, as his daughter warned him of the danger of enemies coming near from his back, he saw women only, and expressed in mockery "What can a woman do?" Yet these seemingly women warriors came nearer and nearer to Apopo; they lassoed him with a loop of coconut sennit around his neck and strangled him to death. They composed a chant in memory of Apopo's death, thus:

"A SENNIT TO LASSO THE NECK
OF APOPO,
CATCH HIS PAIR OF EYES, TAPU,
LOOK HEAVENWARDS, YOU'VE WON,
BY DEEDS OF PUKURUMAATOTO,
BAD WAS THE FIGHTING,
MAY THERE BE PEACE!"

The island now became the property of Iva's people. The warriors planted foodstuffs.

They dug out one huge Kauariki tree at Avarua, the soil from which they took over to Rutuma at Avana, and made a mound from their handful loads and called it: "Soil brought by the people of Iva;" in Maori: "One tari a te Iva." This spot became also a MARAE of Kamuku. That was one mark in memory of the people of

Later when they saw the island becoming overcrowded with the increased population, they departed to their original home-land at the island of Iva, leaving in Rarotonga Kainuku with his canoe of people called Avana-nui.

Afterwards TEIKATAU RANGI'S canoe landed by way of the passage called PAPANAA at Arorangi. (It is assured that in the near future an Article will be written about this legend).

ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF TEREORA

Some forty years ago, the vanished Tereora College stood on a pleasant hill-side at Nikao, opposite the present site of the air-strip. It comprised several buildings, all constructed of wood, housing some one hundred and fifty boys and girls, as well as provide them with a classroom. The fact is generally unknown now-a-days that Tereora was a boarding school, based very much on the lines of any European school.

When we entered Tereora College, the Rev. Bond James was the teacher.

He had no assistants but in a most capable manner, managed to run the school by his personal efforts.

After he retired, Mr. Hall, who had previously taught at the College, took over the task of teaching us.

Entering the College was not an easy matter.

Every intending student had to pass some knowledge of Bible reading, particularly in the Maori language.

Yet, after the fashion of those days, the speaking of Maori in school was strictly forbidden.

As the College was founded and managed by the L.M.S., only students of the appropriate denomination were allowed to attend.

There was great rivalry between boys and girls at their lessons, and also in regard to personal neatness in everything concerning books, furniture, clothing and general tidy appearance. The rivalry extended particularly to the honour of being the school leader.

Boys and girls studied together on various subjects, but there were special classes for each sex. Boys were taught agriculture, woodwork, concrete and cement mixing, and practised fishing in the lagoon. Girls were instructed in sewing, embroidery, cooking and house-work. The standards reached in all these studies were considerably higher than today.

Boys also carried out practical agriculture. We planted 'mario' bananas and breadfruit on the hillside at the back of the school. Even in those days, however, roving cows were a thorough nuisance.

One by one the trees disappeared.

Another ambitious scheme carried out by the boys was the digging and levelling of a sports ground about an acre in size.

I sometimes wonder if modern youngsters would have the energy and initiative to carry out such a project. This sports ground was a great asset to the college. One part of it was set aside for the boys; the other for the girls.

Annual sports were held, and on that particular day most of the population of Rarotonga was present. Events included flat races, hurdles, pole-jumps and cricket matches. Adults seemed to find their way into these events, but no one minded. Cricket matches were also played against local villages, and Tereora won a generous share of the games.

There was no slacking in those days. Under the head teacher were a number of monitors who kept an eye on our younger boys, very much as our ariki used to supervise villages or districts. The usual routine for a week-day was as follows:

6 a.m. Every pupil awoke and neatly folded up his tivaevae, or sleeping mat. If one boy discovered a particularly good way to fold the mat, everyone else immediately copied him. The mats were then placed on the wooden chest in which every boy kept his clothes. On top went the pillow. These personal belongings were then placed against the wall so that the dormitories were left in a tidy condition. Certain boys then swept the floor and generally tidied up.

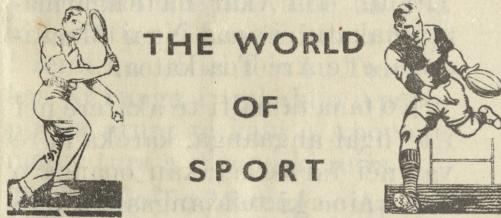

6.30 a.m. Washing took place beside the tank in the adjacent bath-room. Often the tank ran dry, and on those occasions we used to go to nearby wells to draw sufficient water for our needs. In those days we used to manage a complete bath with a two-pound tin full of water. There was no elaborate supply of piped water, and some of the wells we used were half a mile out of bounds. Not that it ever prevented our using them. On the way we used to help ourselves to ripe oranges and mangoes, while keeping an eye open for the possible appearance of the owner of the fruit.

7 a.m. Breakfast usually consisted of biscuits and tea. Only on special occasions did we have butter or jam. Immediately after breakfast we attended prayers in the schoolroom. Thereafter some boys were detailed for special duties under the supervision of the monitors. Usually this consisted of work in our vegetable allotments. We were well-equipped with spades, hoes, rakes and big knives. We planted or cultivated crops such as kumaras, taro-tarua, arrowroot, yams bananas and breadfruit. Even in those days, however, little care was taken to plant essential vegetables such as cabbage, lettuce and carrots.

9 a.m. We changed from working clothes into respectable attire and proceeded boys and girls together to the classroom. According to the timetable for the day, we studied English in the Bible and used the Maori version of the Bible to assist us. The Maori language was also taught but—wonder of wonders—we were strictly forbidden to speak our language outside the classrooms. Geography and arithmetic were two of the principal subjects. The teaching methods must have been excellent for all of us were imbued with a great desire to learn as much as we could.
