Today's Game

PCAA CHAMPIONSHIP

The Aggies are playing for the conference championship!

Sixteen years of college football have gone into the record books since Utah State University students and Cache Valley fans have enjoyed the anticipation of championship football game in Romney Stadium.

Today is USU's final conference game. The Aggies are 3-1 in PCAA competition. The University of Pacific is 3-0 with a rival game against San Jose State coming up next week in Stockton.

USU must win to claim a stake in the PCAA football title for 1978. Pacific, with one loss, along with San Jose and Fullerton are the teams still in the race should the Aggies win.

A win for Pacific today would assure the Tigers of no less than a tie for the title.

Aggie head coach Bruce Snyder stated the importance of today's game when he said, "Our pursuit of the PCAA football championship comes down to one game . . . USU vs. Pacific."

Both teams are coming off solid success last week. USU defeated San Jose State while Pacific was brushing off the new WAC entry, Hawaii.

It was the Aggie passing and kicking game which made the difference last week. Snyder will week for consistency in those two areas again today along with total commitment on the defense and the running game.

Pacific uses several deceptive offensive concepts from the "I" formation. A new defensive alignment (the 6-1) was used successfully in the 27-17 win at Hawaii.

UOP is led by senior quarterback Bruce Parker. He is currently second in the NCAA with 15 touchdown passes.

USU WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS

Women's gymnastics became a premier sport at Utah State University in 1977-78, and promises to be even better in 1978-79.

Last year's Aggie squad compiled a 9-1 dual meet record and achieved the seventh best score nationally, upsetting national powers Arizona State, Southern Illinois, Michigan State, and the University of Utah before large crowds in the USU Spectrum.

Freshmen Alicia Johnson and Jodi Mabb became All-Americans on the basis of their individual performances.

Opening the '78-'79 season the Aggies are ranked seventeenth in the pre-season polls. Second year coach Ray Corn indicates disappointment in the initial ratings, "Especially considering that the entire 1977-78 squad returns along with the addition of an excellent crop of newcomers," he pointed out.

"I expect we will finish 1978-79 in the top five, with an outside chance at a national championship," Corn stated.

Corn has reason to be optimistic, with sophomores Debbie Peterson, Diane Keelan, Michele Thomas, and Tracey Martin returning along with Johnson and Mabb.

Freshmen newcomers include Kim Montagriff, Lori Kreikemeier, Karen West, Paula Bosenbury, Kim Miller and Cheryl Fitt.

In competitions, USU gymnasts will perform in the four Olympic events (vaulting, uneven parallel bars, balance beam, and floor exercise), exhibiting the beauty, daring and skill typical of the modern women's gymnastics.

Coach Corn requires his gymnasts to perform international level skills. The USU team has the talent and development levels to do just that.

The 1978-79 home schedule is very competitive with nationally ranked Michigan State, Utah, UCLA, Southern California, and Denver University coming to Logan for regular season competitions in the Spectrum.

The Aggies also host the championships for Region 7 (Utah, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, and parts of Idaho, Wyoming, and Texas) the top rated AIAW region for gymnastics in the U.S., which includes highly rated Arizona State, Colorado, Utah and Utah State.

Dr. Glen L. Taggart
President

No one has a greater sense of pride in Utah State's athletic accomplishments than President Glen L. Taggart.

One of the most avid supporters of Aggie sports teams, Dr. Taggart has had a distinguished career in education, Government service, and foreign relations.

He is the eleventh president of Utah State University.

No stranger to Utah and the University, he is a Cache Valley native, having been born in Lewiston. He was a 1940 graduate of USU with a B.S. degree in Sociology. In 1946, he received a Doctor of Philosophy in Sociology from the University of Wisconsin.

His Government service extended for a period of ten years, beginning in 1943 when he was named Rural Sociologist for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U.S. Department of Agriculture. From 1944 to 1953 he served as Social Scientist — from 1947 to 1950 as Assistant Chief, and from 1950 to 1953 as Chief of the Foreign Agricultural Service of the USDA.

He joined the Michigan State University in 1953 as Professor of Sociology. In 1956, he was named Michigan State's Dean of International Studies and Programs, and it was from that position that he left to become President of Utah State University on July 1, 1968. From 1964-66, he was on leave of absence from Michigan State to serve as Vice-Chancellor (President) of the University of Nigeria.

President Taggart's wife is the former Phyllis Paulsen of Logan. Mrs.

Taggart holds a degree from Utah State University in art education. The Taggarts are parents of one son and daughter, Edward and Elaine. A son, Stephen, passed away in August of 1969, at the age of 28.

As Michigan State's Dean of International Studies and Programs, Dr. Taggart has served as a consultant to a number of universities, foundations, and foreign governments, and has travelled widely throughout the world.

He is the author of many articles and reports on social relations and international programs. Dr. Taggart holds memberships in the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the American Sociological Association, the Rural Sociological Association, the American Academy of Political and Social Science, and the Society for International Development. He is listed in Leaders in Education, Who's Who in America, and Who's Who in the West.

He is a member of the Regional Advisory Board of the Institute of International Education, member of the International Affairs Committee of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant colleges, member of the Court of the University of the Sierra Leone, and a member of the Panel of Consultants of the Overseas Liaison Committee of the American Council on Education.

Ladell Andersen
Athletic Director

USU's progressive Athletic Director, Ladell Andersen, carries his positive attitude and excitement for Aggie athletics into his sixth year at the helm of the Big Blue program.

Ladell took over the reins of the Aggie program in December of 1972 after two years with the ABA's Utah Stars as head coach. Prior to his stint with the Stars he had a 10-year career as the head basketball coach with the Aggies.

Andersen sees a great future for Utah State athletics. He foresees a program that will continue to grow as the school and community grow; growth not necessarily in the size of the program, but in its' quality.

"My objective as athletic director is not to have a broad program but rather a competitive program with the sports we have," he said.

Under Andersen the Aggies have become full fledged members of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association. USU's football team is involved in its first league race this fall. The Aggies enjoyed success the past 17 years as an NCAA independent.

"We feel we have the best of all worlds right now. We play our PCAA schedule plus teams from the WAC and Big Sky as well as other outstanding teams across the country," he said.

"Such teams as Texas, Nebraska, Arkansas and Penn State give us the recognition and coverage Utah State needs."

Ladell feels the major objective of the Athletic program is to represent the university in an official capacity, and then to entertain the students, alumni and interested followers.

The goal for the Aggies under Andersen is to maintain the NCAA Division 1-A status it now holds and remain a major university. Those goals, he said may call for future expansion of facilities and an increase in fan support to fill those facilities.

Andersen's coaching term with the Aggies (1961-1971) saw him become the winningest basketball coach in the school's history. He coached USU teams to a combined record of 176-95. Six of those clubs won 20 games or more and went into post-season play.

While with the Stars his two teams combined for a 115-53 record, the winningest two-year record in the history of the ABA. The Stars won two Western Division titles. Ladell also coached the West team both years in the ABA all-star game.

Bruce Snyder Head Coach

It is fact that in virtually every measurable statistic, the 1977 Aggies were "up" over the 1976 group. Snyder has designs on that trend continuing in 1978.

Well-respected nationally, Snyder was recently named by AFCA President Carman Cozza (Head Coach, Yale) to the national coaches association's Public Relations and Press Committee. A strong organizer, Snyder is regarded as intense, thorough, efficient: the consummate professional.

"I was always impressed with Bruce as an extremely efficient coach," said current USC Head Coach, John Robinson. "I have coached with him before and I wanted him on my staff when I got this job. Then he went to USU. Bruce Snyder has a great football mind in terms of fundamentals and concepts of on-the-field strategy."

Snyder and his wife — Linda — have two daughters: Jennifer (8) and Tracy (4).

The power of the polls. Do they simply reflect the relative merit of college football teams, or do they unduly and unfairly influence fans, officials, high school recruits, television executives, and those who make bowl selections?

The two wire service polls—the Associated Press (AP) poll of sportswriters and broadcasters and the United Press International (UPI) poll of college coaches—are not unlike movie magazines. Everyone criticizes their value and integrity, but everyone reads them. There is no question they accomplish what the wire services themselves and the newspapers which carry them hope they will. And that's to hype readership and interest. They do the same for the game of college football, which last season was seen by a record-high 33 million people.

"There's nothing wrong with people in the South thinking Alabama should be the national champion," said one veteran coach from that area, "and people in the Midwest thinking Notre Dame is No. 1, and people out on the Coast thinking Southern Cal is best. People everywhere are involved in the selection of a mythical champion. And college football is a national game."

Okay, but those who do the voting pay the price for the polls and all that lovely controversy and interest. The Associated Press, for example, refuses to divulge the names of those writers who vote on its poll. At best, they are bombarded with literature touting teams outside their area. At worst, they become the target of some relatively vicious mail and phone calls from those who think their teams ought to be ranked a little higher.

How do the polls work? The Associated Press, which began the first college football poll in 1936, enlists the votes of 67 sportswriters and sports broadcasters as picked by the various regional bureau chiefs. Basi-

RATING POLLS

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—Blaine Newnham, sports editor of The Eugene (Ore.) Register-Guard since 1971, feels that relevancy is a must for sports writing. "It must answer the questions of the fans. It must be done with style, a style encompassing accuracy, entertainment, integrity and a real care for the reader's needs." Newnham, a journalism major at the University of California at Berkeley, authored the book, The Jogging Experience and was voted Oregon's Sports Writer of the Year in 1974.

cally, the AP picks one writer for every two Division I schools in an area. There are only seven, for example, who vote from the entire West Coast, while the South has 12 votes, reflecting twice as many Division I schools in a much smaller geographical area.

The United Press International, on the other hand, has fewer votes, and positions them geographically with little regard to the density of Division I schools in a specific area. The UPI Board of Coaches is made up of six coaches from each of seven geographical areas. According to UPI, the coaches are picked to vote because of prestige, geographical distribution, and knowledge.

Both wire services collect ballots on Sunday and Monday following the weekend results and publish their polls on Tuesday of the next week. Often the only major difference in the two is UPI's refusal to recognize teams which the NCAA has placed on probation for violating association rules.

"Please," asked one Big Ten coach of a group of writers who vote on the AP poll, "don't give publicity and attention to these schools that are on probation. We must get out of this cheat-probation-championship syndrome we have. Help us." UPI agreed to drop the teams on probation when the coaches voted that it would be that way or they would drop out.

Which poll is more authentic? Both reflect a degree of regionalism, although the coaches generally travel more, and, with other coaching acquaintances, probably know more about teams from other regions. Certainly, they are more equipped to judge the relative merits of teams.

But they also have more to be gained and lost in the final outcome. They have reason to be more political than do the writers. Coaches can vote for friends in the coaching ranks and against enemies. They can easily vote for teams they play, thus maximizing victories and minimizing defeats.

Writers, too, have more data at hand than do coaches. Writers in the West are more isolated than those in the East based on numbers of teams they can physically see, but the Western writers (because of the time zone differences) are privy to all the scores on a weekend, especially those of night games played in the Rockies.

Generally, coaches think the coaches do a better job, and writers stick with their own kind.

There is no question of the appeal of the polls among the college football fans of America. The polls are a comparison of Southeastern football to that played in the Pacific Northwest. Even if all the evils are recognized, the fans want the comparisons, and someone—coaches, writers, or ballots in a national chain of pizza parlors—will supply them.

There are, however, some inherent problems with the polls. Not so much in their authenticity—they never pretend to be anything more than they are—but in what they are used for and the ways in which teams attempt to influence voters.

"I don't believe in weekly polls," said one highly successful Eastern coach whose team is rarely out of the polls. "It generates a roll-up-the-score-to-improve-our-ranking mentality. We talk about sportsmanship and all the other values that we hope we're teaching while coaching football. How can you relate that to the attitude which the polls foster?"

There seems little doubt that the polls tend to feather the nests of football's so-called super powers. In the past 10 seasons, Michigan, for example, has been ranked by both polls nine times and the same nine schools—Michigan, Ohio State, Penn State, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Alabama, Notre Dame, Southern Cal, and Texas—have appeared in the top 10 at least six times.

And beyond the obvious publicity and attention a team gets from a high ranking, there is the very real financial gain realized by attendant television games and possible bowl appearances. There is no question that the polls are important to those who must select the teams which are to receive national television exposure and bowl appearances. And, subsequently, a lot of money.

Those teams which annually appear in the top ten must play themselves out of the select circle. Those outside must play themselves in. It isn't easy.

But whereas the polls tend to foster elitism, they also recognize and dramatize the unlikely rise of an outsider.

While the polls helped make basketball a national game when the sport was basically played at a regional level, they are more important to college football than to basketball. And for one reason: the absence of a national playoff in football.

"I'd rather compete for a mythical national championship than get involved in a playoff," said one Big Eight coach. "With our national reputation and the schedule we play, if we go undefeated in our league schedule we can expect to win the national title. And that's an easier way to win it than going through a playoff."

The Football Writers Association and the National Football Foundation choose their own championships at the end of the season. And Steve Harvey, a news reporter for the Los Angeles Times, pokes fun at the polls and a few unfortunate teams by picking what he calls "The Bottom Ten," a feature which is now syndicated and carried by newspapers all over the country.

There may be other pickers and a guy who makes fun of the whole thing, but in our present condition, the polls of the Associated Press and United Press International determine who's No. 1 in college football. A national playoff would change that, but as one coach said, "a poll is like an IQ test. It's not worth a damn, but it's the best thing we have."

The MacArthur Bowl, designed by Tiffany's of New York, goes to the national champion chosen by the Football Writer's Association.

Blanchard & Davis

by Bill Lyon, Philadelphia INQUIRER

Mr. Inside and Mr. Outside - "Doc" Blanchard (left) and Glenn Davis with their coach, Earl (Red) Blaik. Blanchard won the Heisman Trophy as a junior in 1945; Davis picked it up a year later.

They were called Mr. Inside and Mr. Outside, the most devastating running combination in college football. Between them, they won two Heisman Trophies, two undisputed national championships, shared another, and scored an incredible 89 touchdowns. In three seasons they rumbled through 28 consecutive games without defeat.

They were Glenn (Junior) Davis and Felix (Doc) Blanchard, and for a country devastated by World War II and hungering for news from somewhere other than battle fronts, they were perfect escapism. During the autumns of 1944, '45, and '46, the news tickers interrupted their clattering from battlefronts of the final months and post-war occupation long enough to tell the U.S. how Army's football team was doing, and more specifically, its Touchdown Twins.

It was a time when people gathered around the radio to listen to Franklin Delano Roosevelt's fireside chats, when the hot new movies featured Bob Hope and Bing Crosby on the road, when a stately brunette named Bess Meyerson was Miss America . . . and when fearsome, awesome West Point, the Black Knights of the Hudson, were decimating everyone they played. Coached by Earl (Red) Blaik, West Point scored a staggering 1,127 points in those three seasons, and Blanchard (Mr. Inside) and Davis (Mr. Outside) accounted for 557 of them.

Army buried everyone. It beat Villanova 82-0 and Pitt 60-7 and Penn 62-0 and Brown 59-7, and two years in a row it manhandled Notre Dame, 59-0 and 48-0. The only blemish was a scoreless tie against the Irish in 1946. And, most importantly, the Cadets whipped hated Navy three years running. Those were the days, my friend. Army vs. Navy was a biggie, a golden era in sports.

"Ah, yew betcha," Doc Blanchard said in a Carolina accent as thick as sorghum. "When we played Navy in '44 and '45, we were ranked No. 1 and they were No. 2. You had all that natural rivalry, plus playing for the national championship. The stadium used to be a real loony bin in those days."

Blanchard lives on a lake in Burnet, Texas. He has been retired from the Air Force (he flew 113 combat missions in Southeast Asia) since 1971. It has been, he guesses, at least 10 years since he saw an Army-Navy game in person.

For Glenn Davis, it has been even longer.

"About 1955 or '56, I guess," he said. "But I watch 'em all on the tube."

VRR-ROOM!

The gutsy excitement of a sports car. Enough carrying capacity to surprise owners of cars much larger. Toyota has brought fun and practicality together. And combined it with famous Toyota durability and value. The beautiful result — the 1978 Toyota Corolla SR-5 Liftback.

Driving made fun again. Corolla Liftback puts the fun back in driving because it's got many of the design features of a sports car. Like a standard 5-speed overdrive transmission. So you get maximum performance from the peppy 1.6 liter engine. Corolla also has MacPherson strut front suspension and steel belted radial-ply tires. So it handles as crisply as it moves out.

Sporty cars can be roomy too. Corolla Liftback's big rear hatch allows you to easily load objects many bigger cars can't handle. And the split, fold-down rear seat lets you take any combination of people and gear along for the ride. That's why a pair of skis and your best friend can share the back of a Corolla Liftback with no hard feelings.

A very together car. Corolla's unitized-body construction helps keep your car from getting rattled by a little thing like a bumpy road. Power assisted front disc brakes help you keep your cool, 'cause they're fade resistant. The Corolla SR-5 Liftback. It's the sporty car with room, Vrr-room, and Toyota durability. Now you know why we say, "If you can find a better built small car than a Toyota... buy it!"

And you've made us number one because we make the right truck for the right job. Like the exclusive King Cab.® Only pickup with reclining bucket seats; only small pickup with up to 11.3 cubic feet of lockable storage space behind those buckets.

Or maybe the Datsun Standard—a bed nearly 7-1/2 feet long. Both haul 1400 pounds of people and cargo. Both feature Datsun's reliable 2-litre engine, transistorized ignition, power front disc brakes—all standard! # THE STRONG SAFETY

by Arnie Burdick, Syracuse HERALD-JOURNAL

The strong safety has responsibilities covering the pass in this zone defense, and must be a durable, hard-hitting tackler.

Back in the Rockne-Zuppke-Yost-Warner era of the gridiron, football defenders carried such routine labels as "ends . . . tackles . . . guards . . . linebackers . . . halfbacks . . . safetymen."

Then coaches began tinkering and improvising. They went into five-man, four-man, and even three-man fronts . . . blitzes . . . stunts . . . and stacks. So now we've got more nomenclature roaming the defensive prairie, than the number of grants-in-aid permitted by the NCAA.

In fact, we've got more nicknames for just one position—The Strong Safety—than the entire defensive platoon used to have.

For this "heart" of the defensive secondary they often call "Hero . . . Monster . . . Rover . . . Wolf . . . Warrior . . . or Hey-You!" But never late for dinner.

Because this is a hungry, young, eager athlete who has come to play.

The position of strong safety evolved once the "four-deep-secondary concept" took root. More and more coaches went to a four-deep when the scale of the passing circus jumped several notches, and the bones of the conventional secondary were being plucked clean.

THE STRONG SAFETY

As a defensive wizard from the Southwest said, "We are looking for someone who'd be instrumental in playing the run, and would have the intelligence and experience to direct the secondary and help out in pass coverage.

"That basically was the birth of the strong safety. We wanted an athlete who was a rugged tackler who had plenty of hit in him. He wouldn't be covering the fleet, wide receivers as a general habit, but he'd be strong enough to take the pounding, for most of the attack would be directed to his side of the field."

"The strong safety," observed an Eastern skipper, "just might be the most versatile athlete on the squad. Certainly, we want him to be the surest tackler in the secondary, and an athlete who has the best ability to defeat the block. We want him not only to be able to come up and support the run, but to be able to strip the runner of his blockers."

"We never go into a game," said a defensive coordinator from one Midwestern school, "with less than a half-dozen pass coverages. And I know of more than one school that uses 18 to 20. In addition, some coaches have several wrinkles or change-ups for every defense."

Small wonder the quarterback is having a more and more difficult time "reading" defenses. Still, the QB must be getting the job done, for NCAA major college statistics for 1977 revealed that rushes and rushing yardage again went down, and passes and passing yardage again went up—passes from 38.1 to 40.3 per game and passing yards from 246.9 to 269.0. That was the biggest NCAA passing increase since 1958.

That's all the more reason why aerial ack-ack is receiving much more attention and why the key to the defensive secondary—the strong safety—has increasing responsibilities.

"The ideal strong safety," says a coach whose team has had a permanent address in the Top Ten for the past decade, "would be a 6-2, 210-pounder who runs the 40 in 4.6 seconds. Most of us settle for less! Size is actually less important. Many excellent strong safeties on both the collegiate and professional level have been in the 5-10 to 6-0 range, and 185 to 195 pounds.

"More essential is that the SS has the speed and quickness to play the deep zones as well as the short zones against the pass, plus occasional man-for-man. He must also be intelligent enough to understand the coverage system and have the judgment (and hopefully intuition) to make quick, successful decisions.

"Against the run, the strong safety must come up on sweeps and option-pitch plays like an outside linebacker. To play off the block of a lead back or pulling guard requires him to have exceptional strength and body control. And, of course he must be a fine tackler."

One Pacific Coast coach weighed in with this analysis of the strong safety: "I want him to be an athlete who likes to tattoo people. He must be dedicated and love the game, but he also has to have football savvy.

"I often try an ex-quarterback at the position. A fine high school QB who's rugged enough to get the job done. He's got the intelligence and the leadership to run our secondary. And usually he's a great decision-maker, so he can make the right move in the run-pass situation."

One Eastern mentor sees a trend coming that would mean four equal backs in the secondary. "Certainly, it would be ideal," he says, "if the strong safety were a little faster and the free safety had a little more hit in him. In that case, they would be very even, and you would never have to flip-flop your two safeties when the other team goes into motion, or inverts its strength to the other side of the gridiron."

"The strong safety?" asked one coach from the Heartland of America. "I want him to be a hard-nosed, gung-ho kid. He's got to have savvy, but he's also got to possess a devil-may-care recklessness. Even cockiness."

Obviously, the strong safety is a many-splendored thing to our nation's coaches, but all agree that he's the most important cog in the defensive secondary. Summing it all up, he must be a superior athlete in many dimensions, because he's called upon to perform a variety of pressure-packed football functions.

Intelligence and speed are two characteristics of a good strong safety, though sometimes a little bit of circus-aerialist doesn't hurt.

He lives in North Hollywood, Calif., and is director of special events for the Los Angeles Times.

Blanchard was Army's tank, slugging straight ahead, bulling and ramming between the tackles, crunching for 1,666 yards and 38 touchdowns over three years, and playing a mean defense. He scored on a 79-yard pass interception against Pitt.

"I played at about 210 pounds," he recalled, "and that was big for a back in those days. What people might not remember was that we didn't have two-platoon football in those days. If you played, you played both ways. I was a linebacker two years, then messed up my knee and got switched to defensive back my senior season."

"You had to learn to pace yourself 'cause you'd carry the ball, block, catch passes, and be in for punts and kickoffs and extra points, too. Fact is, they used to have a rule that if you left the game in, say, the second quarter, you couldn't come back until the third quarter. So if you got hurt, you tried never to let anyone know about it."

Blanchard won the Heisman in 1945.

became the first football player ever to win the Sullivan Award as the nation's outstanding amateur athlete, and in one memorable powerhouse run against Michigan, carried three Wolverine defenders five yards for a touchdown.

But he is not one of those old warhorses who grouches that the game will never be the same.

"Football today is a lot faster, a lot more exciting," he said. "They run off more plays and they can teach a player more because they don't have to divide up the practice time."

"I don't make too many banquets any more, but now and then I run into people who still remember the old days. They're in their 50s, and they'll bring kids over and say, 'Son, I want you to meet Doc Blanchard,' and the kids will look at you and they'll be polite and all, but in their eyes you can see them wonderin', 'Who's he?' That's OK. I had my time in the spotlight."

So did Glenn Davis, who could pass and catch and run; especially run, to the outside after the defense had been softened up by Blanchard's inside power.

"With all due apologies to others who have played this game," said Lou Little, whose Columbia team had lost to Army, 48-14, "Glenn Davis is the best runner I have ever seen."

And Steve Owen, then the coach of the New York Giants, added: "I played with Red Grange, and Glenn Davis was better than Grange. He ran faster and cut better; he could run right up on top of you and then break a square corner."

Davis won a staggering 11 varsity letters at West Point in football, baseball, basketball, and track. He set what still stands as the Academy's record for physical efficiency, scoring 926 points out of a possible 1,000 in the 10-event program. Davis scored 51 TDs in three seasons, rushed for 2,957 yards, and had an average gain per play, running and passing, of 11.59 yards.

"Neither Doc nor I ever gained 200 yards in a game," Davis said. "But I'd only carry maybe 8-10 times a game. The good runners today, the Simpsons and the Dorsetts, it's nothing for them to get 30-40 carries a game. I don't know what they would have done playing under our conditions. It's like comparing apples and oranges."

"I played safety on defense, and in '46 I averaged 57 minutes of playing time. You'd run halfway across the field to make a tackle, then go back to return a punt, and on the next play you were carrying the ball or blocking. You weren't always as fresh as a daisy."

Unlike Blanchard, Davis tried pro football after his discharge in 1950 and he gained 416 yards as a rookie with the Doc Blanchard was Army's fullback, scoring 38 touchdowns over three years.

Rams, but injuries snuffed his career. Like Blanchard, Davis yearns for a comeback by the Point.

"The whole climate of the country was different in our day. With the war just ending, it was a very prestigious thing to be a Cadet. Every top player in high school wanted to go to the Point. Today, if a kid is good, he wants to go someplace that will be a steppingstone into the pros, and not worry about military service. But I'm sure West Point will survive."

Davis still receives letters and autograph requests every week, even though it has now been more than 30 years since he and Blanchard were working their magic.

"Fame is a funny thing," Davis mused. "Once you get it, your life is never your own. You feel like you belong to the public, especially the kids. I guess they need somebody to idolize. I don't like public speaking, but I do it. I guess I feel I owe that much."

Glenn Davis, just before he hung up, had a question of his own: "What's Doc's phone number these days? I'd like to talk to him. Our paths don't seem to cross much any more..."

Glenn Davis scored 51 TDs and rushed for 2,957 yards in a three-year career, playing both ways.

SO YOU THINK YOU KNOW COLLEGE FOOTBALL?

TRUE OR FALSE QUESTIONS

1. A team may play legally with fewer than 11 players as long as at least five men are within five yards of the restraining line when receiving a free kick and at least seven men are on the offensive scrimmage line.

2. Only a team's field captain may request a free time out.

3. At the time of the snap, an offensive team can have only three players in motion.

4. A receiver has a foot out of bounds while signalling for a fair catch of a punt, but steps in bounds when making the catch. The signal and the in-bounds fair catch are legal.

5. A player catches a kick in the end zone, then fumbles and, in attempting to recover the ball, forces it out of bounds behind his own goal line. The ruling should be a touchback.

6. On a field goal attempt from the 30, an opposing defender leaps above the cross bar and bats the ball in flight. The ball goes out of bounds in the end zone. The defending team is penalized 15 yards from the previous line of scrimmage.

7. The ball (question 6) is batted into the end zone and is recovered by the kicking team. The ruling: touchdown.

8. The ball (questions 6 & 7) is batted into the end zone and is recovered by the defending team. Ruling: touchback, no penalty.

9. Washington State quarterback Jack Thompson's pass is intercepted by Idaho and during the defender's runback Thompson is roughed. Idaho keeps the ball after a penalty.

10. Under college rules, three-digit numbers and 00 are permitted if a team has more than 99 players suited up.

If it's action you're after, Nikon has a choice of compacts for you.

You see them in action at every major sports and news event—the professionals with their motor-driven Nikon cameras. They know they can rely on Nikon to get the picture, every time.

You can, too, with a Nikon "compact." The moderately priced semi-automatic Nikon FM or the fully automatic Nikon FE. Both are a lot smaller and lighter than the pros' cameras but engineered with the same Nikon precision. And, they handle with a speed and ease any pro could envy.

Each has a built-in electronic meter system that gives you superb exposures with professional accuracy. With the FM, it's done in one quick, simple step; a bright 5-stage LED light signal in the viewfinder makes it virtually foolproof. With the FE, the meter does it automatically, and a quick-responding needle indicator keeps you informed about exposure. You simply aim, focus and shoot.

Add the low-cost motor drive to either camera and feel the excitement of true high-performance photography at up to 3.5 shots a second. Get close to the action with a Nikkor telephoto lens, or take in more of the field with a Nikkor wide angle (the same magnificently sharp lenses the pros swear by).

There's no end to the great photography you can do with a Nikon compact. It begins with your visit to your Nikon dealer (he's listed in the Yellow Pages). ## WOMEN IN THE WORLD OF FOOTBALL

The roles of women relative to college football are changing all the time. While the traditional roles—member of the drill team or flag squad—still exist, many women are joining the band, becoming sportswriters, or assisting the team trainer.

Bucky Badger was engaging in the usual pregame antics, prancing through the warmup drills of the football team that was about to play the University of Wisconsin. Bucky was taunting the players, mockingly shaking a furry fist—all for the amusement of the more than 70,000 fans packed into Camp Randall Stadium.

Bucky got one player riled up. The big, burly guy charged at the oversized mascot, giving Bucky a piece of his mind in no uncertain terms.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—Tracy Dodds has been a sportswriter for the Milwaukee Journal since Dec., 1973, when she graduated at Indiana University. While at IU, she served as sports editor of the student newspaper and wrote sports for the Bloomington Herald-Telephone. She won a first place award for investigative reporting in the Associated Press national sportswriting awards in 1978, after taking second place the year before.

But the person inside the Bucky suit stopped the angry fellow dead in his tracks by lifting the four-foot head and peeking out through the neck. "Wanna make something of it?" asked the pretty sorority girl inside.

It figures. Women are everywhere these days. Even infiltrating college football.

There was a day when women went to football games to cheer—either from the stands or from the sidelines. They added to the excitement and the color. They were a part of the air of gala festivity.

But they weren't trusted to add much in a constructive way.

Take a look around at a college football game now, and there are women everywhere but in the game.

There are women sportswriters, women radio and television commentators, women statisticians, women sports information directors, women photographers on the sidelines, women marching in the band, women trainers. And there's at least one school with a woman coach, even though she's not actually a field coach.

Not to mention the women directing traffic in the parking lots, women who usher the fans to their seats, women who roam through the stands selling coffee and soft drinks. And even women security guards.

Women are everywhere.

Yet the college game is flourishing. Bigger and better than ever. So these women must know what they're doing. (Much to the chagrin of some members of the old guard.)

It was not so long ago that a woman in the press box was a sacrilege. The old, gray writers stared and snorted.

It was not so long ago that all press passes said: NO WOMEN OR CHIL-

Women still make up much of the color of college football as cheerleaders and song girls.

DREN. Now most say: WORKING PRESS ONLY.

It was not so long ago that the only women in the press box were women who were there to fetch coffee or to type the copy produced by the men in the press box. For years there were women at the Western Union keyboards. Now, with many papers using computer systems in their newsrooms, there are women to type stories into electronic systems.

But more and more women are in the press box as members of the working press.

They know the game. They know a quarterback from a cornerback, a tight end from an end zone, and a Woody from a Bear. They know that after a second down comes a third down, unless, of course, it's a first down—or a touch-down.

It's really not all that hard. If some of those big linemen on the field can understand it . . .

The writing itself is no obstacle. Women have long been able to write poetry and novels and plays and textbooks, to cover world events, politics, and murder. Why not use the same skills to record the events of a football game?

It's just the lockerroom that boggles minds. The Lockerroom. That noble inner sanctum. One of the most time honored privileges of being a sportswriter is gaining access to that hallowed hall.

There have been women writers who have gone right into the lockerroom with their male counterparts. But most do not.

Either way, any woman who has worked as a sportswriter for more than a week has logged hours ad nauseam discussing The Lockerroom.

Point: Women can't be sportswriters. They can't go in the lockerroom. What are you? Weird? Immoral? You want to see naked boys? Sportswriters have to work on deadlines. They can't be standing around outside wasting time. Besides, they have to get quotes while they're fresh. Send a woman out to do a man's job? Can't be done.

Counterpoint: A writer covers a team seven days a week. For six days, coaches and players are available other places. On the seventh, the all-important game day, they retreat to the lockerroom right when the writer needs them. However, most coaches hold their interviews in separate rooms. No

Bernie Bierman, the "GREY EAGLE" of Minnesota

by Jon Roe, Minneapolis TRIBUNE

Bernie Bierman (in light trench coat, third from right on bench) coached Minnesota's Golden Gophers to five national titles in the '30s and '40s.

It was a holiday in the Fall of the late 1930s and the University of Minnesota football team was looking forward to a short practice. Their coach, Bernie Bierman, had told them they would be done early.

After all, they all knew that Bernie Bierman's word was gospel. And he had said the day before that "We'll be done with practice earlier than usual" because of the holiday. A lot of the players had made plans for the late-afternoon free time.

"In those days," recalled George (Butch) Nash, one of the players on the Golden Gophers team, "we started practice around 3:00 or 3:30. And we'd practice 'til about 6:30.

"Since it was a holiday, Bernie told the squad to report around 1:30 that day, because everybody had the day off from classes, and we'd get practice done early.

"Well, we started practice. And we practiced. And we practiced. And we practiced. Finally, about 6:15, Bernie said,

'OK, I guess that's enough for today.'

"He hadn't lied. We had gotten done about 15 minutes earlier than usual."

Nash laughed, recalling the incident. Many former University of Minnesota football players do the same thing when they recall their playing days under the man everybody in Minnesota knew as the Grey Eagle. They laugh or chuckle now; they trembled or raged then.

It is more than coincidence that Bierman was nicknamed The Grey Eagle. Yes, there was that thatch of grey hair, but more important there was the soaring aloofness; that detachment; that boring eye; that quality of independent reverence.

From the time he was born in Springfield, Minn., on March 11, 1894, until he died in Laguna Hills, Calif., March 8, 1977, Bernard William Bierman never seemed to lose those eagle-like qualities. He had them in the 1930s and 1940s when his teams won six Big Ten championships and captured five national titles. He had those qualities when his last University of Minnesota team won just one game in 1950 and he was hung in effigy.

He was—and probably still is—Minnesota football.

"I think you'll find that most of his players didn't really have a lot of good things to say about him until a few years after they were done playing for him," observed Dick Cullum, the veteran columnist of the Minneapolis Tribune who covered Bierman's teams during their glory years.

"He could be deliberately antagonistic. He was very reticent to let the players get too close to him during their playing days. He would chide them. 'Do you think you can play football for Minnesota?' he would say to them. He would have them run the same play over and over in practice. Twenty or 25 straight times would be common. And very seldom would he say that he was satisfied.

"But nobody ever worked harder than

We can't afford to run out of ideas.

Make America smarter. Give to the college of your choice.

A shortage becomes a crisis only when there is a shortage of trained minds to solve it. And for today's manifold shortages, that means college-trained minds.

Colleges are facing an altogether different kind of shortage. They're having to drop courses, fire professors, close laboratories, limit libraries. Without your help, we'll have the ultimate crisis on our hands: a shortage of ideas.

problem. And there is nothing a player can say inside the lockerroom that he can't say outside the lockerroom. Players are not only willing to come outside to talk to women reporters, but they are usually glad to do it.

A disadvantage becomes an advantage when a woman stands outside getting a calm, one-on-one interview while her male counterparts are inside falling all over one another—and the overwhelmed players—all collecting the same quotes, stepping on one another's questions, and letting everyone in on their line of thinking.

Women do quite well when the odds are even, too.

For example, at the Rose Bowl game, the writers and broadcasters outnumber the players and coaches. The lockerrooms are too small for the team members. No way to let the press in the lockerrooms there.

Writers who are used to strolling up to the star of the game by reading his name on his locker get panicky when they wait outside until their time is running out, especially when they realize that they might have missed their guy, anyway, because all the players look alike in their team blazers as they scurry toward the buses. Desperation sets in; they get nervous; at that point, some writers—and even some of the TV glamour boys—have been known to look over a young lady's shoulder to discover that she has, indeed, stopped the Michigan quarterback whom they had not recognized in time.

With each incident of that type, though, women become more respected as peers. As the years go by and fellow writers see that some "token" women are actually doing the job, actually meeting deadlines, actually taking the job seriously and not making a mockery of their profession, an acceptance sets in.

For the last four years, a young woman has traveled with the Big Ten Skywriters on their annual journey to all the conference football camps. No sparks. No animosity. She helps move the luggage and the typewriters from the bus to the plane, and they explain to her that last joke she didn't get because she didn't know that coach when he pulled that "funny" in 1957.

So it can work. It just doesn't always. Different people, different egos, different areas of the country, you know.

But even the sportswriters who are not too pleased with the sharing of bylines are having to get used to having women in another job that they can't ignore.

The very best photographers draw football assignments, and women draw more of those assignments all the time.

Several schools have hired women in their sports information departments. Most are assistants. But some schools have hired women to be the Sports Information Director.

They are writing the releases, announcing the press conferences, compiling the statistics, and hostessing the press boxes. Hard to ignore that.

The SID is the official liaison between the press and the athletic department. It's primarily a public relations job, and women can handle that beautifully.

The SID is also the person in charge of press passes and seating charts. Not too many women are likely to have passes printed that say: NO WOMEN ALLOWED.

And the SID hires the statisticians who spot and chart the game. And, yes, women are doing that, too. It takes at least eight statisticians to record all the credits and debits on any one play—and women can count yards and tackles as well as anyone.

Those women from the SID's office can then run up to the radio booths to distribute those quickie halftime stats—to be read on the air by women doing play-by-play and color.

It happens. Women are still greatly outnumbered in the press box, but with the way journalism schools are turning out women who want to work in sports, the number is growing everyday.

And with the way women's sports are growing, there are more and more newspapers, and also radio and television stations, hiring women to cover them. But a sportswriter is a sportswriter, and they end up covering wrestling and football, too.

The growth of women's sports has also affected an upsurge in the number of women interested in all phases of physical education. The college girls are taking kinesiology and are starting to study sports medicine—also a growing art. When those young girls aren't taping women for their field hockey games, they are taping fingers for linemen.

Tiny college girls station themselves on the field with scissors and tape and ice bags during the blistering heat of August workouts and through the ice and cold of November games.

They are the trainers. Some are athletic trainers of the future. Some of them are doctors of the future. But they stand by on the sidelines, come what may.

Also on the sidelines are the photographers. Of course, some of them are women. Shooting action of a football game is a real challenge, not like shooting the speaker at the women's club luncheon. And it's an assignment that most photographers prefer over shooting the speaker at the women's club luncheon. So the photogs who draw the game assignment are usually the best a newspaper, magazine, or wire service has to offer.

They wear jeans and khaki jackets, carry a case full of lenses and film, and dangle four or five cameras. They jockey for position with the competitors, and they run from one end of the field to the other. They risk being trampled by a runaway fullback. That happens.

But they get the picture.

And the women in the band make the music. There was a time when the only women who performed with the band were majorettes. The twirlers and the pompon girls. Sometimes the flag bearers. It took an upheaval of a minor degree for that to change in some traditional leagues. But now the women wear those big, hot uniforms—tall hats, spats and all—and they march with the rank and file playing music.

They weren't satisfied to play with the concert band, to sit on a stage in a long skirt and play fugues. They wanted to wear pants and march and play that blaring, military music.

Now they do.

If brass bands aren't sacred, what is?

SEATBELTS THAT PUT THEMSELVES ON.

Remember when Mom attached your mittens to your coatsleeves? The theory was, even the warmest gloves in the class wouldn't do you much good if you didn't use them.

The theory's the same for seatbelts.

That's why one of the many exclusive features in the deluxe model Rabbit—the Rabbit "L"—is an automatic seatbelt in each front seat.

When you slide into your seat, you're sliding behind the seatbelt.

When you shut the door, the seatbelt is fastened.

There's no buzzing to remind you that you forgot.

Because if you're driving our Rabbit "L", you don't have to remember.

Together with a knee bar that restrains you from jolting forward, our seatbelt makes the most advanced passive restraint system available.

Of course, by 1984 every new car in America must have a passive restraint system. Transportation Secretary Adams says so.

But we didn't wait to be told. Only the Rabbit "L" has automatic seatbelts today. And has had them since 1975.

That's because Volkswagen doesn't think like any old car company. Volkswagen thinks like a mother.

FAMOUS TEAMS THAT EARNED THEIR FAMOUS NICKNAMES

by Jack Wilkinson, New York NEWS

Teams that earned their nicknames included Michigan's "Point-a-minute" teams (above); the Cal "Wonder Teams" of 1920-24, led by Brick Muller (top); and the "Thundering Herds" of USC, which included Cotton Warburton (left).

What's in a name? Very often, very much. Just ask an actor, or better yet, an actor's fan, which sounds better: "Spartacus" starring Kirk Douglas, or "Spartacus" starring Izzy Damski of upstate New York? Bernie Schwartz sounds like a cabby from Brooklyn, but when he changes his name to Tony Curtis, he's a star. And how would it sound if Archie Leach, not Cary Grant, was crooning, "Judy, Judy, Judy"?

What's in a name, then? An awful lot, and that goes for college football as much as it does for Hollywood. And that especially goes for nicknames. In Florida, it is not, "Did you go to Florida?" or "Are you a Florida fan?" It's simply, "Are you a Gator?" In Alabama, it is "Roll Tide" as much, if not more, than talk of 'Bama. In Texas, in both the English language and the sign language, it is "Hook 'em, Horns." But those are official, sanctioned nicknames, ones which the administration approves of, ones which the bookstore prints on anything and everything money can buy. But perhaps more than any other sport, college football is rich in another kind of nickname. You know the kind: the kind that gives a particular Florida team, or a particular Alabama defense, or a particular Texas backfield, an identity all its own, an identity that sets this group apart from all others. The reasons for these nicknames are as diverse as the decades in which they are given. They are as recent as the Georgia "Junkyard Dogs" of two seasons ago, but the real craze began long ago.

It would be fine for two old Michigan alumni to be sitting and talking about

"Those great teams Fielding Yost had in the early 1900s." But say, "Yost's Point-a-minute Teams," and immediately you know who is being discussed, and how they got their name.

Quite simply, from 1901 to 1905, when they outscored the opposition by 2,841 to 40, the Michigan Wolverines averaged scoring nearly a point per minute. Consider each season:

- 1901—Michigan was 11-0, outscored its opponents 550-0, and won the first Rose Bowl game, 49-0, over Stanford on Jan. 1, 1902.
- 1902—11-0 again, 644-12 in points.
- 1903—11-0-1 (a 6-6 tie with Minnesota), 565-6 in points.
- 1904—10-0, 567-22 in points. Michigan scored over 100 points in four different games, including a 130-0 victory over West Virginia that is still the highest-scoring Michigan game ever: football, basketball, or anyball.
- 1905—12-1, 495-2 in points. Michigan ended the season with a 2-0 loss to Amos Alonzo Stagg's University of Chicago team, which ended the Wolverines' streak of 56 straight games without a defeat.

There was Andy Smith's Cal Wonder Team of 1920, which went 9-0, and which then became Andy Smith's Cal Wonder Teams of 1921, 1922, 1923, and 1924. California was 9-0-1 in '21, followed by seasons of 9-0, 9-0-1, and 8-0-2, and won the first two games of the 1925 season before finally becoming Not-So-Wonderful by losing.

But it was the year before, during that 1924 season, that the most famous of college football nicknames, and perhaps the most famous sports nickname ever, came into being.

Sportswriter Grantland Rice was sitting in the Polo Grounds that afternoon, having just watched Knute Rockne's Notre Dame defeat Army for the ninth time in 12 meetings, 13-7. And as Rice began to write, the Fighting Irish backfield was no longer merely great. It became immortal.

Rice wrote: "Outlined against a blue-gray October sky, the Four Horsemen rode again. In dramatic lore they are known as Famine, Pestilence, Destruction and Death. These are only aliases. Their real names are Stuhldreher, Miller, Crowley and Layden. They formed the crest of the South Bend cyclone before which another fighting Army football team was swept over the precipice at the Polo Grounds yesterday afternoon as 55,000 spectators peered down on the bewildering panorama spread on the green plain below."

Rice went on to call Harry Stuhldreher, Don Miller, Jim Crowley, and Elmer Layden "one of the greatest backfields that ever churned up the turf of any gridiron in any football age." But that is hardly the same as the Four Horsemen. Not surprisingly, that Notre Dame line became the Seven Mules. Not surprisingly, there are a couple of thousand people who remember the Four Horsemen for every one person who remembers the Four Horsemen's names.

The following year, Southern Cal hired Howard Jones as a coach on Rockne's recommendation; and in 16 years Jones turned out a string of championship teams known as the Thundering Herds. The Trojans, who had ten consensus All-Americans during the period including Mort Kaer, Morley Drury, and Cotton Warburton, had three unbeaten teams, won three national championships (1928, 1931, and 1932), and were five for five in the Rose Bowl.

In 1933-34-35, Stanford had its "Vow Boys." As freshmen, the football players in the Class of '36 vowed never to lose to Southern California. And they didn't. Thus, the "Vow Boys," who kept their vow.

There is another college football nickname that is nearly as well known as the Four Horsemen—and again, it was Grantland Rice's doing. Fordham (yes, Fordham) had great teams in the 1930s, playing Jock Sutherland's Pitt teams to a couple of scoreless ties. But the best known team from Rose Hill was the 1937 team.

That team was undefeated, and that team had an outstanding line which played both ways. They were Leo Paquin, Johnny Druze, Ed Franco, Al Barbartsky, Nat Pierce, Alex Wojciechowicz, and one Vince Lombardi. Lombardi went on to immortality as coach of the Green Bay Packers, and that line went on to immortality when Rice nicknamed it the Seven Blocks of Granite.

In the fall of 1954, the town of An-

DO-IT-YOURSELF STATS N' FACTS

Every football fan knows that the score doesn't always give a good picture of a game. A few statistics, like those that can be kept on this page can make the picture clearer, show what the individual stars contribute and help to win post-game "debates." Besides, it can be fun to second guess the official scorers whose statistics will appear in tomorrow's papers. But before you start, here are some pointers on being a statistician:

1. Keep cumulative totals to be informed "up to the minute" and to simplify your figuring of team totals. EXAMPLE: Jones gains 3, 6, 9, 2 yards and you write 3, 9, 18, 20 on his line.
2. On plays involving penalties measured from the point of the foul, credit the rusher or pass receiver with yardage only to the point of the infraction.
3. Charge gains and losses on fumbles to the player who, in your judgement, contributed most to the error.
4. Don't score two-point conversion attempts after touchdowns as rushing or passing plays.

"GREY EAGLE"

he did. In those days the head coach was THE coach. Assistant coaches usually had other jobs on the outside, and it was up to the head coach to get practices planned out ahead of time, get everything organized. And Bernie had everything planned down to the last detail."

Cal Stoll is the current University of Minnesota coach. He played as a reserve end under Bierman in the late 1940s.

"All of us came to Minnesota with great respect for Bernie as a coach," said Stoll. "With the record he had compiled, what else could you have but respect?"

"His practice schedules never said that such-and-such a drill would begin at 4:15 and end at 4:35. It would say that the drill would begin at 4:17 and end at 4:48. He left nothing to chance, if he could help it."

There was little portent of legend when Bierman was born in the small community of Springfield, Minn., before the turn of the century. He played the usual sports in high school—football, basketball, baseball, and track—at Litchfield, Minn., and enrolled at Minnesota in 1912. He didn't play football his first year because of a ruptured appendix, but by his senior year he was captain of the 1915 team that shared a Big Ten title with Illinois.

Minnesota didn't win another conference crown until he returned as coach.

After World War I service and coaching stints at Montana and Tulane, where his team played in the 1931 Rose Bowl, he became Minnesota's head coach for the 1932 season and his first two years were less than spectacular. His teams had 5-3 and 4-0-4 records, but his attention to details was building a foundation for an unprecedented era. The Gophers were about to become Golden.

"The game that helped put Minnesota on the map, and helped gain the Big Ten national recognition, was the 1934 game against the University of Pittsburgh," said Cullum. "Pitt was the power of the East and it was one of the first visits by a team from the Midwest and the Big Ten.

"Minnesota won the game and Bierman, who was normally a pessimist, said afterwards that he wasn't worried about another game on the schedule that season. And here it was only the third game of the year."

Minnesota went undefeated in eight games that season—scoring 270 points and allowing just 38. The team won the Big Ten championship and was named a consensus national champion.

The Gophers went undefeated again in 1935—and again were named national champs—and rolled through the 1936 season with 28 games without a loss until upended by Northwestern 6-0. Still, Minnesota was again named national champion.

The 1937 and 1938 squads also won conference titles, and, after a losing year in 1939, Minnesota and Bierman came back with undefeated years in 1940 and 1941. There were two more national titles and Minnesota's only Heisman Trophy winner—tailback Bruce Smith.

Bierman is credited with being the first coach to use blocking dummies—instead of other players. He was a disciple of the single-wing offense with an unbalanced line that relied on power and precision rather than deception.

He was capable of deception, however. His 1941 team remained unbeaten because of deception—the "talking play." While one of the Gopher players engaged some Northwestern players in a heated discussion near the sidelines following a play, the Minnesota center snapped the ball—without a huddle or signals and not through the center's legs—and halfback Bud Higgins ran for a touchdown. The Gophers won 8-7 on one of the most controversial plays in football history.

His final years at Minnesota were successful—by most standards—but not what Minnesota fans had become accustomed. During the glory years, those fans not at a jammed Memorial Stadium huddled around radios to listen to the games. It was possible to walk down the main streets of Minneapolis and find out the score of the game in progress because everybody had a radio turned on.

Nash can vividly remember the final glow in the Bierman years. In 1949 the Gophers traveled to Ohio State for a key conference game. Minnesota was unbeaten and had the makings of another national champion.

"We traveled by train in those days and Bernie always liked to stay at a place out of town the night before a game," said Nash. "We barely got to the game at Ohio State on time. In fact, I think the game had to be delayed for a while. It was not Bierman's usual well-organized day, but we won the game easily."

"The next week we played Michigan and I remember the night before the game Bernie was more talkative than I can ever recall. He felt very confident."

"We lost the next day and when I came into the office on Sunday, Bernie was just crushed. He felt that this was a team that could go all the way and he was so sorry for all the guys. That was Bernie, he was always trying to do what was right for the team—right for the players."

The Gophers—and Bierman—never seemed to recover from that loss in 1949 and at the end of the 1950 season—after just one victory—he resigned.

In his 16 years at Minnesota, Bierman developed 14 All-Americans, including Bud Grant, the current coach of the Minnesota Vikings, and Bud Wilkinson, who became a legend in his own right at Oklahoma and now coaches the St. Louis Cardinals.

"Bernie might have been rigid and forthright," said Wilkinson. "But he didn't talk out of both sides of his mouth. He had integrity. He was completely honest and fair, and the most thorough, hard-working individual I have ever known."

Billy Bye was a halfback on that ill-fated 1949 team. "I think the other thing is that you've got to go back and put Bierman where he was in the 1930s and 1940s. It was kind of an age of heroes and idols and he was THE hero in Minnesota. He was the No. 1 hero of what I thought was the biggest show in town—Minnesota football."

Bob Bjorklund played for Bierman from 1938 through 1940. He was the captain of the 1940 national championship squad and he has a fitting bottom line to the enigma that was Bernie Bierman.

"Other than my father he was probably the greatest influence on my life," said Bjorklund. "He probably got more out of you than any person I've ever known."

"We used to curse him on the practice field, and love him on Saturday afternoons."

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—Jack Wilkinson has specialized in covering college sports for the New York Daily News for the past 14 years. The former Hofstra University quarterback worked for Newsday during his college days. Then, upon graduation, he joined the sports staff of the Miami News. Prior to assuming his present position he was with the Chicago Daily News.

napolis, Md., was bubbling with excitement. After too many years of Army's Mr. Inside and Mr. Outside, Doc Blanchard and Glenn Davis, Navy fans truly had something to cheer about. The Midshipmen began that 1954 season with consecutive victories over William & Mary, Dartmouth, and Stanford, and already people were looking for a distinctive nickname.

It was left to Navy Coach Eddie Erdelatz, who said, "The fact that they have so much desire, why not call it 'A Team Named Desire?' Like that streetcar in New Orleans." There was no Stanley Kowalski in the Navy backfield, but by the end of the season there was a 7-2 record. And by the evening of Jan. 1, 1955, there was an upset of Mississippi in the Sugar Bowl.

By 1958, Paul Dietzel was in his third season as head coach at Louisiana State. Back when he had been an assistant to Sid Gillman at Cincinnati, Dietzel had formed an idea. Now it was time to use it.

Dietzel recalled that in the comic strip "Terry and the Pirates," there were "Chinese Bandits" who invariably seemed to be the meanest, toughest sort of people. Just the kind of people a coach might like to have on a football team. So that year, when Dietzel designated his three units, he used the following names:

- The White Team, the offensive starters, who included Billy Cannon, the halfback who would later win the Heisman Trophy.
- The Go Team, the backups.
- And the Chinese Bandits, the defensive team that was mean and tough enough to beat everyone during the regular season, and then shut out Clemson, 7-0, in the Sugar Bowl to clinch the national championship for LSU.

Eleven years later, there was another defensive unit that became well known through its nickname. The year before, in 1968, the entire, youthful Southern Cal team was called the "Cardiac Kids." Fordham's "Seven Blocks of Granite" line: (L-R) Johnny Druze, Al Babartsky, Vince Lombardi, Alex Wojciechowicz, Nat Pierce, Ed Franco, and Leo Paquin.

QB Frankie Albert and Coach Clark Shaughnessy made Stanford's 1940 team the "Wow Boys," going from 1-7-1 the year before to 10-0 and the Rose Bowl title.

They won a lot of games (10-0-1), but not much respect, at least according to their coach, John McKay.

McKay called that "the most maligned, undefeated team in history." There was no national championship, despite going undefeated, and despite going 4-0-1 against teams in the Top 15. But the next season, 1969, when Texas and Arkansas battled for the national championship with President Nixon flying into the stadium to watch, USC gained a reputation and a nickname, if not a national title.

There were three people who were mainly involved: Marv Goux, Al Cowling, and Sam Peckinpah. Goux was McKay's assistant in charge of the defensive line. He had a reputation for being mean, and likened his players likewise. One day at practice, Goux screamed, "We're the meanest, wildest bunch I've ever seen."

Cowling, who would become an All-America defensive tackle that season, remembered an immensely popular film he'd recently seen: Peckinpah's "The Wild Bunch." Terry and the Pirates and the Chinese Bandits had nothing on The Wild Bunch when it came to being mean and tough and nasty.

So when Goux screamed at his players, Cowling yelled back, "Coach, we're the Wild Bunch." And the name stuck, with the help of pictures of the players dressed in cowboy and Mexican hats, with rifles and pistols and bandoleros full of bullets.

And two seasons ago, the defense most college football people were talking about belonged to Georgia. Head Coach Vince Dooley and his staff were looking for a nickname, something that would denote meanness. They came up with the "Junkyard Dogs," from the Jim Croce song:

"Bad, bad Leroy Brown, baddest man in the whole damn town, badder than ol' King Kong, meaner than a junkyard dog."

That was it. The Georgia defense first became the Junkyard Dogs, then the entire Bulldog team. And as the Junkyard Dogs won 10 of their first 11 games to win the Southeastern Conference championship, their fans kept screaming at the opposition, "Dog meat, dog meat." And players, coaches, and finally Dooley himself shaved their heads for effect.

All of this finally caught up with the Junkyard Dogs in New Orleans, in the Superdome, where they were to play unbeaten, first-ranked Pitt. By New Year's Day, the Panthers were sick of being called "Dog meat." And by New Year's Night, they were the national champions, after Tony Dorsett ran through the Junkyard Dogs and helped give Pitt a 27-3 victory.

Where will the next popular college nickname come from? Look at the field right below you. You may be looking at the basis for a "F.I.S.T." or "Jaws" defense right now.

"MY WIFE GOT THE HOUSE,

Ever notice how people feel kind of special about Sony Trinitron® Color TVs?

It stands to reason, really. Because Sony Trinitron TVs are kind of special.

What makes them special, primarily, is our unique Trinitron one-gun, one-lens system—the thing that's largely responsible for the remarkable Sony picture.

And this year Sonys are even more special, thanks to our new push-button Express Tuning™. It's "direct access" for instant channel selection. And the tuner is electronic, so there are no moving parts to wear out.

Also, this year Sonys have improved brightness for, believe it or not, even better picture quality.

So the next time you hear some one acting a little precious about his Sony, remember one thing:

There is something a little precious about his Sony.

"DADDY RICH"

"Daddy Rich" is responsible for the welfare of 84 people.

That may seem like quite a burden for one man to carry, but senior tailback Richard Phillips of Memphis, Tenn., seems to have things under control.

Phillips' first concern is for the well-being of his wife Janis and their two children (a third is on the way). He's taking care of them by earning a business degree, with plans of eventually becoming a lawyer.

His other chore is supplying a ground game for the University of the Pacific football team. Phillips has fulfilled this obligation by averaging 5.2 yards per carry while playing less than one-half of each game.

So it's easy to see Phillips, who turned 26 years old Oct. 15, has set his priorities, and is going about the business of successfully accomplishing his goals.

"I feel more pressure in the classroom than on the football field, because I don't have to make football my life's work," explains Phillips, who is affectionately called "Daddy Rich" by his teammates. "It won't destroy my plans if I don't play pro football. My basic goal is to get a degree, get out and make lots of money so I can support my family."

A football scholarship, the GI Bill and his wife (Janis is an employee at St. Joseph's Hospital) are supporting the 5-foot-10, 182-pound athlete at this time, and it's quite apparent Phillips wants to be the one earning the money.

"I couldn't afford to come to this school if it wasn't for the football scholarship," said Phillips, who has known hard times in the ghetto of Memphis.

At one time football was something Phillips dreamed about, but never got the chance to put into practice. He joined the Navy after graduating from high school (Amador of Pleasanton) and when he left in 1974 thoughts of playing football still danced in his mind.

He walked on at Fresno City College in 1974, having to watch the other guys to "see how to put on my shoulder pads." Phillips quit after realizing he wasn't going to get a chance to play, so his dream appeared over.

He came back, though he never started, and Phillips averaged six to seven carries a game.

Then came the magic season on 1976. Phillips, in his second season of playing football, was his team's MVP, finished fourth in the State of California in rushing and was the 10th best JC runner in America. He rushed for 1,111 yards, averaging 7.5 yards a carry.

"He is a great open-field runner," said Pacific Head Coach Chester Caddas. "We didn't think anything about his age. He is the kind of guy who will hit somebody, kind of collapse his legs, scoot over a bit and just go."

Phillips came to Pacific with the goal of gaining 800 yards in his first season. Naggng injuries slowed him down over the first part of the season, and by the time he was healthy Bruce Gibson (Pacific's second all-time leading rusher) had been switched to tailback.

Phillips still gained 338 yards on 71 carries and scored one touchdown. Once again, it looked like Phillips would have a chance to really get it going in his second year. But the Tigers recruited junior college stars Levell Quiller and David Edwards, which moved Phillips back to third string.

Phillips bit his tongue, but remained patient. He finally got his chance Sept. 23 in the second half against Cal. With exclamations in the press box like "Who is that? Where did you find him?," Phillips dazzled all present with an 89-yard performance on 10 carries. He had two electrifying runs, one of 49 yards which is the longest for the Tigers this season.

BIG BLUE CLUB

The 1978 Big Blue Club (Aggie athletic booster organization) membership drive was the most successful effort of athletic fund raising in the history of Utah State University. The following Aggie boosters: Shirley Baugh, Ron Maughan, Gene Farnsworth, Tuff Claybaugh, Jerry Cronquist, Russ Fjeldsted and Ralph Binns, directed a team concept of fund raising which brought in pledges well over the goal of $100,000.00.

Listed on the following pages are the names of Aggie boosters who pledged a Big Blue Membership in 1978. All pledges are expected to be completed by December of this year. The Big Blue Club is directed by David W. Sorenson, president, with each of the above named serving as directors and Fred Hunsaker is treasurer.

AGGIE TRAINING TABLE

Established in 1974, the "Training Table" is a group of farmers, ranchers and other friends of the University who donate items of beef, flour, potatoes, sheep, eggs and other commodities or cash in support of the Aggie Athletic program.

LaDell Andersen, USU director of athletics, personally visits each of the donors each year to discuss and maintain the Training Table concept.

The growth of the program has been due to an excellent referral program. Assistance has come from Aggie boosters

Shelley Thomas talks about her viewers.

"There's no better way to find out how you're communicating with people than to talk to them in person. And what's nice about having them come up to you is that they consider you to be their friend. People will even pull up a chair to my table at a restaurant to talk to me."

Ford Atkinson talks about the weather.

"People are interested in the basic weather information... what is tomorrow going to be like, and how do I prepare for it. And not only tomorrow, but what about the next couple of days. That's why we started the five-day forecast. To give viewers a sneak preview of the weekend."

Steve Brown talks about his job.

"As a sportscaster my job is to find out what's going on. I'm kind of a watchdog who looks out for the viewers, and puts the sports news in proper perspective. Both for the guy who's into sports and the casual fan who wants something out of the ordinary, an unusual sport or just a unique angle."

The New Chevrolet.

The 1979 Caprice Classic.

America has driven it to the top.

In just two short years over a million people have bought and enjoyed The New Chevrolet Caprice and Impala. Pretty darn impressive.

Of course, one reason for the success of The New Chevrolet is that it's simply a very beautiful car. And we suggest the '79 version is even more beautiful.

But then we know it takes more than beauty to become the most popular car in America. It takes roominess. It takes some very impressive standard features. It takes a smooth, comfortable ride. And more.

The New Chevrolet for 1979. Pleasing to the eye. Pleasing in lots of other ways, too.

It's no wonder America's driven it to the top. See your Chevrolet dealer.

You're invited to visit the Chevrolet "Locker Room" exhibit at the National Football Foundation's new College Football Hall of Fame at King's Island (25 miles north of Cincinnati). This unique museum lets you participate in the fascinating history of college football. Don't miss it.
