

Harpur Palate: a Literary Journal

Volume 3 | Issue 2

Article 15

January 2004

Phone Calls

Alan Brich

Follow this and additional works at: <https://orb.binghamton.edu/harpurpalate>

Recommended Citation

Brich, Alan (2004) "Phone Calls," Harpur Palate: a Literary Journal: Vol. 3: Iss. 2, Article 15.
Available at: <https://orb.binghamton.edu/harpurpalate/vol3/iss2/15>

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by The Open Repository @ Binghamton (The ORB). It has been accepted for inclusion in Harpur Palate: a Literary Journal by an authorized editor of The Open Repository @ Binghamton (The ORB). For more information, please contact ORB@binghamton.edu.

Phone Calls

Alan Brich

For a while I lived in the room of echoes.
It wasn't so bad. Bare walls and no windows but it had a couch and a lamp
and a three-legged table with a phone.
The phone was old and black.
I was sitting on the couch
in the room of echoes
when the old black phone rang.
I wasn't surprised.
Phones ring. That's what they do.
I sat and watched it ring for a couple years before I decided to pick it up.
I put the receiver up to my ear. A voice cut through the static.
I recognized the voice. It was mine.
It was a bit strange to hear my voice
from this old black phone
but I have seen stranger things so I went along with it.
This is what my voice said:
It's going to take some time.
Then a pause.
A mythic pause full of static.
I waited for one of myselfs to say something.
Nothing came. Static.
Finally one of us said good-bye and I hung it up and sat there on the couch
in the room of echoes.
There was nothing else to do with the blank walls and no windows
so I called myself back. I knew the number.
It rang and rang.
I knew I was on the other side

