CHAPTER II.

THE CHILDREN.

Immediately the charming form of a little girl arose in his imagination. Her name is Elizabeth and she is about five years old. He also is a boy again and about twice the age of Elizabeth. Around her neck is seen a red silk handkerchief, which is very becoming to her brown eyes.

"Reinhard," exclaimed she, "we have a holiday. No school to-day and no school to-morrow!"

Reinhard, who already had his slate under his arm to start for school, quickly placed it again behind the door. Both rushed out of the house into the garden, and then ran through the gate into the pleasant green meadow. The unexpected holiday was, indeed, very agreeable to the children. Reinhard with the cheerful assistance of Elizabeth had built in the meadow a play-house with sod. As they intended to spend their summer evenings in this house after the work and study, they needed yet a bench. So he immediately began the task. Nails, hammer and the necessary boards he had, and also the determination to make a bench. While he was gathering his material and was hammering, Elizabeth strolled along the bank of the stream and gathered into her apron the round discs of the wild mallow, with which she intended to make chains and necklaces for Reinhard and for herself. Having finished the bench in spite of the many nails driven crooked, Reinhard came out of the sod-house and saw her far away at the other end of the meadow.

"Elizabeth," called he, "Elizabeth," and she heard the call and came running with her curls tossing around her beaming face.

"Come," said he as she drew nearer, "now is our house finished. Why, you are so very warm! come in, let us try my new bench. I shall tell you a new story."

Both went in and sat down on the bench. Elizabeth began her intended work on the round seeds in her apron by stringing them on long threads, and Reinhard began to relate his new story.

"Once upon a time there were three spinsters—"

"My!" interrupted Elizabeth, "I know that by heart. You must not always relate the same old story."

The story of the spinsters had to be dropped, but in its stead the story of the man who had been thrown into a lion's den was begun.

"Then it was night," continued he, "you know, quite dark and the big lions were fast asleep. Now and then they yawned in their sleep, showing their horrible red tongues. This frightened the man and he longed for the light of the morning. Suddenly there shone a bright light about him; and when he looked up, he saw an angel standing before him. This one beckoned to him and then vanished silently away through the rocky wall of the den."

Elizabeth had listened so attentively and was so interested that she could not immediately answer.

"An angel?" she asked in surprise, "and did the angel have wings?"

"It is only a story, you," answered Reinhard, "there are really know angels."

"O, pshaw, Reinhard, don't talk so foolishly," returned she looking him squarely in his face.

Then he looked at her more sternly and somewhat displeased, because she had contradicted him. This made her trust more in his superior wisdom, and also created in her innocent heart a little doubt.

"Why then do they always say so?" she asked again not willing to renounce her old faith so readily, "Mother believes in them, so does auntie and those at school."

"I do not know how that is," answered he.

"But tell me," began Elizabeth again, "are there no lions either?"

"Lions? Whether there are no lions? In India, there the heathen priests hitch them to wagons and drive with them through the wild jungles and over the desert. Wait until I am a man, until I am big, I'll go there myself. There it is many thousand times more pleasant than here. There is no winter there at all. You must go along with me then. Will you?"

"Yes," replied Elizabeth, "but my mother must go along and also your mother."

"No," said Reinhard, "they are then so old and feeble that they cannot make such a long journey."

"I dare not go alone."

"You shall be allowed then; don't you know, you'll be indeed my wife then and the others have not a word to say."

"But my mother will weep."

"We will come back again," said Reinhard provoked at her slowness in giving consent, "tell me now, will you go with me to India? or else I shall go alone and never return."

The little girl almost cried when he spoke those harsh words.

"Do not make such angry eyes," said she softly, "I shall indeed go with you to India."

Reinhard was pleased with her willingness to go along with him to that distant land of lions and heathen priests. He seized her with both hands and drew her out of their sod-house into the meadow.

"To India, to India!" he sang whirling and dancing around and around so that her red handkerchief flew off her neck.

"But suddenly he released her hands and with a sigh and downcast eyes he soberly said,

"Nothing will come of this talk anyhow, because you have not the courage."

"Elizabeth! Reinhard!" called some one at the garden-gate, "come."

"Here we are, here," answered the children readily, and hand in hand they skipped and ran toward the house.

Dr. H. T. Spangler was present at the installation of Swarthmore's new President last Saturday.

Prof. Dechant visited his Alma Mater and was present at the installation exercises of President-elect Woodrow Wilson.

TUESDAY NIGHT CLUB

SCHILLER AND GOETHE

At the meeting of the Tuesday Night Club, Dr. Grimm spoke on the friendship between Schiller and Goethe. He said in part:

"In June 1894 Schiller wished to start a periodical Die Horen with the intention of uniting all the best writers of Germany in a common effort for the advancement of letters, and the elevation of the public taste. At such an undertaking Goethe could not be missing. So Schiller sent him a polite invitation, and Goethe cheerfully accepted. Soon afterwards it happened that Goethe and Schiller were both present at a meeting of naturalists in Yena. As they left the room together Schiller remarked that such piece-meal treatment of nature as they had been listening to was dull business for the layman. Goethe replied that there might be experts who could not approve it either. Then he went on to explain his own views. They reached Schiller's house in earnest conversation about the metamorphosis of plants, and Goethe entered to continue his demonstration with the help of a drawing—most likely of a typical plant. Schiller listened with great attention, and when Goethe had finished, shook his head and said: "That is not an experience, that is an idea." Goethe was disappointed, perplexed. He restrained himself, however, and simply replied that he was glad if he had ideas without knowing it, and could actually see them with his eyes. Schiller defended himself in an able and conciliatory manner, and the two separated in mutual respect.

On the 23d of August 1794 Schiller wrote Goethe a letter in which he attributes to him a wonderful intuition whereby he saw in advance all that philosophy could prove.

When Goethe received this letter he saw that Schiller understood him; that with all their differences they were spiritual congeners. He replied very cordially to the man who had thus 'with friendly hand struck the balance of his existence,' expressing the hope that they might proceed on their way together.

A few personal interviews brought about a perfect understanding and laid the foundation of a most intimate and lifelong friendship between the two poets, which is without parallel in the history of literature."

MAGAZINE ARTICLES.

BY MARY E. SHADE, '04.

Emile Zola, the great French novelist, who died recently, claims a great deal of attention in the "North American Review." In the "Cosmopolitan" Ex-Senator John M. Thurston gives an instructive article on the St. Louis Exposition. The "World's Work" contains an instructive discussion on Europe vs. America by Andrew Carnegie.

The line of fiction is well represented in McClure's by "The Leather Funnel,"—A. Conan Doyle, author of "The Hound of the Baskervilles."

FOOTBALL

URSINUS, 16. F. AND M., 0.

Last Saturday we defeated F. and M. at football for the first time in our football history. It was a game in which every man on the Varsity played his best and strongest. F. and M. contested pluckily every yard, but the Ursinus team could not be stopped; three times the defenders of the Red and Black pushed their opponents down the field and over the goal line. But even the score 16-0 does not portray the full strength of our team. For off-side play and holding penalties lost a chance to score at least one touchdown. The chief ground gainer for Ursinus was Ziegler. "Gus" played the best offensive game ever seen here. He ploughed through the F. and M. line every time he was called upon, and generally, he was given the ball to make the necessary four or five yards on the third down. When a man lay before him, a flying leap would clear the way and make the distance. Gus was ably helped by Captain Roth, who stuck to the runner; and quite a number of times he lifted or dragged the runner to his feet and enabled him to make better gains. Roth's work on the defensive was as strong as on the offensive. Newmiller and Faringer both proved good ground gainers, and both protected the runner in the interference. All the linemen played up to their standard. Trexler made some nice tackles. Price and Rapp protected the ends in fine style and gains were few and small when directed around either wing.

FRIDAY NOV. 21, 1902.

The organization of the Historical-Political Club a few weeks ago for the particular benefit of the students in the Historical Political group has added a new phase to the ever open question of club life at Ursinus. At least the question of time is emphasized by the multiplicity of clubs, and this is, without doubt, one of the burning questions with every college student.

Besides the literary societies, we now have special department organizations in the Tuesday Night Club, for the English, Philosophy and Art departments; the Audubon Science Club, for the Mathematical, Chemical and Biological students, and the newly formed club already mentioned. Now from the fact that the essential nature of all the clubs is, in the main, not technical, many students belong to each club, hoping to gain a good general view of the up-to-date knowledge in each field.

The recurrence of a meeting of each club once a month takes three nights. The fact that but few students belong to each individual club throws the actual preparation of the various papers upon these few. As a consequence, many students have revolted against some of the clubs and attend only the meetings of the club of their particular choice. Hence the attendance is falling off and the interest is lagging.

The clubs are not organizations of the professors; they are for students and professors, and if good is obtained from them, the burden must not fall upon such a few.

What we suggest is this: That the clubs consolidate, meet once in two weeks, and take turns in the particular departmental work.

SOCIETY ECHOES

An interesting miscellaneous program was rendered in the Schaff Society, November 14. Miss Hobson's essay on "Dorothy Vernon" and Miss Dotterer's "Comparison of Rowena and Rebecca" were well written character sketches. In "What College does for a Man," Mr. Gutshall gave the advantages which the college man has over another.

Mr. Wagner's oration, "The Desire to Know," showed in a masterly way what education does for its possessor and how restless it is and even grasps for more. "A Similar Case," recited by Mr. T. C. Miller completed the program.

The Alumni Meeting which was held by the Zwinglian Society Friday evening was attended by a large number of Alumni and townspeople. The presence of veterans in society work was much appreciated.

The program was of a general character. A piano solo by Miss Boston, A. was followed by a reading from "Tom Sawyer" by Mr. Balliet, A. McConnell, '05 read an essay on "Abraham Lincoln;" a selection from Emerson entitled "The Memory of Burns" was read by Mr. Peters, '03; "A short Discussion on Co-education" was the subject of Mr. Townsend's paper. "Life's Weaving" was recited by Miss Behney, '06; Carol G. Petri, '00, the author of the Campus Song, read an original poem on "An Alumnus' View of the Football Situation." A piano solo by Miss Kathrine E. Laros, '00, and several vocal solos by Edgar A. Appenzeller, '00, interspersed the above numbers. The Zwinglian Review was read by Mr. Price, '05; Lloyd M. Knoll read the "Night Extra" edition of the same. Prof. W. A. Kline, '93, spoke on "The Benefits of a Literary Society Training." The program closed with several mandolin solos by Harry W. Snyder, A.

Miles A. Keasey, '06, was elected as an active member at this meeting.

MR. GRISTOCK DINES THE VARSITY.

One of the most enjoyable features after last Saturday's great football victory was the banquet tendered the team and Athletic Committee by one of their most ardent supporters, Mr. Frank Gristock. The boys looked forward to this event with great pleasure, and since they knew that it would be a gloomy affair after a defeat, it became an added incentive for victory.

Shortly after the game, the guests assembled at Mr. Gristock's home and were soon invited to the dining-room and told to "tackle hard." Ursinus colors were in evidence, Ursinus spirit was overflowing, and Ursinus appetites were equal to the emergency of demolishing the "close formations" of good things spread before them. After many downs had been made, toasts were given by Dr. Barnard, Prof. Gummere, Mr. Hobson, Prof. LeCompte, Dr. Krusen, Coach Kelley, Asst. Coach Lentz and Captain Roth. The host was then called on and responded. College songs were sung amid the smoke of the new luxury—cigars, and the happy gathering broke up just in time to meet the "Night Gown Brigade."

Such affairs show the interest taken in our victories by our townspeople and are appreciated by the team. Mr. Gristock accompanied the team on several of its trips and has always been an interested supporter. His attendance almost daily at the practice has been encouraging; and the sincere sentiment of the football team is a hearty Ursinus cheer with the addition, "Rah! Rah! Rah!—Gristock!"

REV. J. MONROE STICK

Farewell services of the Rev. J. Monroe Stick were held last Sunday afternoon at St. Jacob's Church. The Revs. N.W. Sechler, pastor, Dr. A.R. Bartholomew and J. M. Stick delivered addresses. The services were impressive and attended by a large audience from all over the county. On Sunday evening another farewell service was held at Trinity Reformed Church, York, Pa. All the Reformed churches in York were represented and took part. This service was also largely attended and impressive. The Revs. Stick and Dr. A. R. Bartholomew delivered stirring addresses at this service.

On Thursday evening, November 20, 1902, the Rev. Stick was married to Miss Estie Pearl Fair, of Baltimore, Md., the only daughter of Dr. H. W. Fair, a Sunday-school superintendent for thirty years in the Lutheran Church.

Mr. Stick is the newly elected Business Manager of the Japan Mission at Sendai, Japan. On Monday, November 24, he and his wife will leave Baltimore for San Francisco, taking the Southern Route via New Orleans and Los Angeles, and on December 3 will sail on the steamship China for Yokohama via Honolulu, and expect to arrive at Sendai, Japan, the scene of their labors, December 24.

Mr. Stick was graduated from Ursinus with the class of '99. While in college, in 1896 he became a Volunteer for Foreign Missions. He was a member of the Philadelphia Volunteer Union, and Chairman of a Students' Missionary Campaign Band at the Ursinus School of Theology. Mr. Stick is also fond of music. He was manager of the Glee and Mandolin Clubs at Ursinus two seasons and did the pioneer work for those clubs. He was director of the University of Pennsylvania Band for two seasons. He goes into the field well equipped for his work.

Ursinus will have sent four men as missionaries to the foreign field within a year. The Rev E. M. Scheirer, '96, is laboring in China, the Rev. A. R. Kepler, '98, in India, the Rev. W. A. Reimert, '98, is even now crossing the Pacific en route for China, and the Rev. J. M. Stick, '99, will sail for Japan on December 3.

Y. M. C. A.

Thursday evening of last week, Dr. James I. Good addressed the meeting on the subject, "The Love of Christ Constraineth Me." Hope and fear are great powers and may do much towards shaping our lives, but love will do much more. The love of Christ is a three-fold power: a training power, a restraining power, and a constraining power. It not only leads us into right doing, but keeps us from sin and temptation.

The Rev. B. F. Paist, '99, closed the Week of Prayer Sunday evening, November 16, by a short address, in which he explained the need of setting apart a certain time for praying for the young men of the world. After this address, Dr. Spangler spoke on the "Ethics of Football." An abstract will be given in the next issue of the WEEKLY.

The best work for F. and M. was done by Kilheffer, the little right half-back. He gained most of their ground on the offensive, but his defensive work was the best ever seen on our field. Every time Ziegler broke through the line Kilheffer tackled him, not by waiting, but by running hard to meet him. Kilheffer's tackling was low, sure and daring. F. and M. put in five substitutes during the game. Their most reliable offensive player, Horn, was taken out shortly after the first half commenced. Westerman, the quarterback, was also hurt so badly that he was forced to go to the side lines. Stein left the game toward its close. F. and M. men were hurt quite frequently, and it seemed as if our team was in better all around condition. Yet in spite of the loss of their players the Blue and White fought desperately and almost scored in the second half. F. and M. pluck is proverbial; their team did its best.

This quiet little town probably never dreamed before of seeing such a thing as 200 yelling football rooters. It probably never ever dreamed of playing the host for the "fashionables," non-descript and all the other necessities of a modern football crowd. However, last Saturday did not need imagination in order to gain reality for there was a crowd of over a thousand to see the game. The F. and M. rooters showed life as soon as they came to town. They marched up the main avenue singing catchy songs and gave their yell before Bomberger Hall. One of their songs had the fatal 16 in it, but it was only something about pennies. Our cheering and singing was a revelation both for volume and variety. F. and M. outnumbered us, but armed with "megs" and brimming over with enthusiasm, we held our own. The competition in cheering became especially ardent when a number of Hill School students arrived on the field. Both F. and M. and Ursinus rooters vied in doing them honor.

THE GAME.

Ursinus appeared on the field first and received a hearty welcome. Soon afterward F. and M. trotted out eighteen strong. Both teams then ran limbering up signal practice.
