DOWRY IS NOT A GIFT

It is a transaction that forms part of the marriage contract.

Dowry is a cultural practice where a person transfers money, property, goods, or in the form of other gifts to their partner's family before, upon or after marriage.

IDENTIFYING DOWRY

Follow the money

Identifying dowry starts with mapping the client's story. Dowry maybe called 'wedding gifts'. We need to establish who gave these 'gifts', who received it and the value was. We need to establish where the benefit or gain is in these transactions.

These "wedding gifts" may be money, property, jewelry, payment of students fees and/or payment of visa processing fees.

For example, in South Asian communities, usually the 'wedding gifts' are given by the wife and/or her family to the husband and/or his family. The benefit or gain, here is in favour of husband and/or his family.

IDENTIFYING DOWRY ABUSE

Ask the questions

Dowry Abuse is 'any act of violence or harassment associated with the giving or receiving of dowry at any time before, during or after the marriage'.*

It is perpetuated to elicit dowry or fulfil further demands for dowry at any time before, upon or after marriage.*

Dowry abuse identification involves linking the violence experienced by the client with demands for dowry.

To do this the right questions need to be asked. Here are examples of questions, that can be used:

- What kinds of 'gifts' were given as part of the marriage arrangement?
- What is the total value of these 'gifts'?
- Do you think this has an impact on what is going on now in your marriage?

The answers then need to be clearly documented in case files.
