Gallery: Jon Adams, A Study of Corvids

Jon Adams is a contemporary artist, advocate and researcher. He makes a variety of work in many differing media often referencing his autism, synesthesia and dyslexia, all interwoven with history, science, time and his past experiences. He's shown in galleries such as Royal Academy, Tate Modern, and been commissioned by many arts and science organizations including projects for Parliament, London 2012 and on stage.

I like corvids

I feel that

corvids are stimmy corvids are simply dinosaurs corvids are quite intelligent corvids hold funerals corvids talk to each other corvids know themselves corvids have neurodivergence corvids will outlive us corvids won't make the same mistakes.
