PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENT

WE are much indebted to the advertisers in this program for the kind assistance they have given the committee. Through their generous patronage we are permitted to publish this handsome Souvenir Program.

The local firms represented are the largest and most reliable in their line in St. Louis. Their establishments are well worth a visit, and delegates to the Convention are respectfully requested to remember these firms when making purchases.

Our schools represented are also commended most highly to the delegates.

For the use of the songs in this program and in the pamphlet used by the Century Chorus Choir, we also acknowledge our thanks to the following Authors and Music Publishers: W. E. M. Hackleman, J. H. Filmore, W. J. Kirkpatrick, W. A. Ogden, Grant C. Fuller, J. C. Hawes, R. E. Hudson, D. B. Towner, Mrs. L. E. Sweney, Mrs. A. F. Myers, Geibel & Leaman, Whieden & Van de Venter, E. O. Excell, Chicago, Filmore Bros., Cincinnati, Hackleman Music Co., Indianapolis, Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis and Biglow & Main Co., New York City, N. Y.

THE NAME

ESTEY

WHETHER SEEN UPON A

PIPE ORGAN,

REED ORGAN

OR PIANO

means the nearest approach to Perfection that is possible in a Musical Instrument.

The attention of Ministers and Churches is especially called to the Estey Pipe Organ—a most perfect and satisfactory Pipe Organ within the reach of even the smaller congregations. The Estey Pipe Organ contains pneumatic action throughout, making the touch as light as that of a piano. The tone is wonderfully rich, full and resonant, and has that sustaining and carrying quality so important in congregational singing. Catalogues and testimonials of Churches using Estey Pipe Organs furnished or mailed to any address. Listen to the Estey Pipe Organ in our World's Fair Exhibit, No. 63 Liberal Arts Building any afternoon.

Estey Reed Organs for Homes, Sunday Schools or Churches have been before the public for 58 years and are conceded to be The Best by everyone.

Estey Pianos contain every modern improvement and many valuable patents exclusively their own. In tone, touch and mechanism they lead all others.

We cordially solicit a call at our warehouses or correspondence from any point.

 Shall we, to man be-night-ed, The lamp of life deny?
 Till, like a sea of glory, It spreads from pole to pole

From many an ancient river, From many a palm-y plain,
 In vain, with lavish kindness, The gifts of God are strewn;
 Salvation! oh, salvation, The joyful sound proclaim,
 Till o'er our ransomed nature, The Lamb for sinners slain,

THE GREAT WORLD'S FAIR AT ST. LOUIS.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW ON THE WING.

BY WALTER B. STEVENS, SECRETARY LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.

DISTANCES on the World's Fair grounds are more than magnificent. They are confounding. The 1,240 acres enclosed mean a mile and three quarters one way and a mile and one quarter another. There is a way to do the Fair in thirty-six minutes. It is a bird's-eye view with the bird on the wing.

This Universal Exposition of 1904 has ten entrances—two on the Park or east side, four on the north line, one on the west, and three on the south side. Street cars run direct to all of these entrances.

For a visit in which minutes count, the northeast, or Lindell Boulevard entrance is the choice. It is the quick way to the midst of things. It is the starting point for a complete tour which includes a glimpse of every one of the three hundred buildings.

The turnstile clicks behind. An avenue to the west between tall maples leads in a hundred yards to the grand plaza of St. Louis. And Saint Louis, towering upon a Norman horse, holding high the cross upon his sword, guards the entrance. Here is a great paved space on which to maneuver a brigade. On either side is the strip of lawn; then double rows of trees with walks beneath. To the east and to the west rise the facades of exhibit palaces, sixty feet to the eaves. On the left is Manufactures, with imposing columns. On the right is Varied Industries, with its curious double colonnade, its many urns and low domes. These are palaces, indeed. To be material it is six hundred feet across the plaza from front to front of these buildings.

Where the plaza ends to the southward is the Louisiana Purchase monument. Beyond is the water of the main lagoon, bright and clear, with the shadows of the cornices and columns of palaces mirrored. Education is on the east, Electricity on the west.

The lagoon broadens into the Grand Basin. The vision travels lingeringly over the plaza, along the fronts of palaces, across the water to be lifted upward to the central cascade, to the Festival Hall, with its mighty dome and to the Colonnade of States. It is the first comprehensive picture of the World's Fair. It amazes the brain. It quickens the pulse. On the first visit the feeling is one of wonder. Each successive visit discovers some new effect and beauty. The last view, when the lights go out at midnight of the 30th of November, should be from this spot, to last for life.

PALACE OF MANUFACTURES.

From the corner of the plaza a car of the Intramural moves westward every two minutes. The moving picture of the World's Fair unrolls at the rate of ten miles an hour. Out of the south window the northern front of Varied Industries, 1,300 feet, slips by. Through the north window are the peoples of the Pike and their habitats. Contrasts are strong and strange and at close range in this first mile of the Intramural. Mountains of Tyrol with snow tops are succeeded by Government House at Dublin and Irish cottages which give way to Byzantine architecture.

One needs to have ambi-vision not to miss something of the polyglot Pike. Japan and Siberia are as closely associated as if there had never been danger of friction over Korea. The Bazaars of Stamboul, the Egyptian market place, Old St. Louis, Mysterious Asia, and those modern fire-worshipers, the American Pompiers, who astonished the whole world at Paris in 1900, are near neighbors. Each locality has its typical construction and its distinctive people. The panorama is an all-world life. And more than that, it tells the story of life. Here is "Creation," a great blue dome. There is the "Galveston Flood," and beyond, by some strange fitness of things, "The Hereafter."

The concession amusement is by no means a side-show of the Exposition. It is co-ordinate with the architectural triumph and the wonderful exhibit. Concessions have been elevated at this World's Fair to such a position in point of cost and character that it is possible some visitors will carry away the impression that the Pike is the greatest of all. The other day an employe of the concession "Creation" was telling his friends down town some of the wonderful facts about it. He was asked where this marvelous concession was located. "Why," said he, "don't you know? The World's Fair is right next to it."

The car moves across the Plaza of St. Anthony, giving just time enough to glance along the vista filled by the pavilion at the west end of the Colonnade of States, the beautiful structure rising from among the forest trees of the higher level and outlined against the blue of the southern sky. Palace of Transportation, with its 1,600 feet of length fills the view on the south, a building with massive arches at the ends and plain sides suggestive of a palatial union station, having sixty doors. As the car passes, it is possible to get instantaneous views of trains de luxe and the great collection of vehicles and transportation devices covering many acres of space. In the center of all, high in the air, upon a turntable slowly revolving, is a mogul engine, the wheels of which are moving at a speed of sixty miles an hour, while the electric searchlights on locomotive and tender reach all parts of the building.

PALACE OF MACHINERY.

The Intramural car has not traveled a mile until the visitor has been impressed with the fact that this is an Exposition of life and motion. Across Skinker road the Place of Nations is reached. The first building to be seen is that of Mexico. Our neighbor on the south participates with energy. In rapid succession the Orangery of Great Britain, the Government Houses of Siam, of Nicaragua, of Brazil, are seen. Russia, Sweden and Austria are in the immediate foreground. Just beyond are China and Cuba side by side, oldest and youngest of nations, if we except Panama, represented by a cozy pavilion. Italy has a Pompeian villa. Belgium is represented by a town hall.

The route continues under the northern shadow of the first University group where are the administrative and executive offices of the Exposition, the Department of Anthropology, the fireproof hall of the jubilee presents of Queen Victoria, the Hall of Congresses and the building of the Board of Lady Managers.

A level plain to the westward is the Aeronautic Concourse of 1904, whereon the airships will contend over a course of several miles for the grand prize of $100,000, and where numerous balloons rise in races for various prizes aggregating nearly a like amount.

PALACE OF ELECTRICITY.

The Intramural route turns southward on reaching the athletic field or "Stadium," and the granite building devoted to the Department of Physical Culture. Here is an amphitheater within which is being contested the most comprehensive programme of games and sports the world has ever known.

From the Stadium the car travels westward to the barracks and camp ground, where military schools and national guard organizations have quarters and drill every week of the Exposition. One-third of the thirty-six minutes has been consumed. One side of the World's Fair has been seen through car windows. The route turns southward. It misses nothing. On the right is the great Indian Industrial Building, with Indian villages scattered in front. The building is so arranged that on one side of it are seen the classes of an Indian school, numbering one hundred pupils, being taught the various trades. On the other side are the grandparents of these pupils making arrows, weaving baskets, beading moccasins and carrying on the original industries of the American aborigines. To the left is seen an elaborate exhibit of switches to illustrate the signal system in its best development as "made in Germany."

Beyond the Indians is the crop map of the United States. Spread upon six acres of fertile hillside is an outline map of the States with crops characteristic of them marking the location and boundaries of them. It is geography taught in vegetation.

On the edge of Arrowhead Lake, in the valley, is a station of the Intramural which is one of the most frequented on the route. Arrowhead Lake, long and narrow, bounds the Philippine Reservation on the east and north. It is crossed by three bridges. The middle one is patterned after the famous Puerta de Espana of the Pasig River at Manila. This bridge leads to a section of the ancient walled city and into the royal gate. On a rising slope are located a dozen large buildings, nearly all of them reproductions of well-known structures in the city of Manila. These buildings contain the 60,000 exhibits of forestry, ethnology, education and agriculture from the Philippine Islands. Four hundred Filipino soldiers live in the walled city; 800 natives, representative of the Moros, the Bagobos, the Igorote, the Negritos and the Visayans, inhabit Filipino villages scattered among the exhibit buildings. A Filipino band of eight musicians plays in the plaza. The reservation requires whole days to satisfy curiosity and interest. A passing view within the space of a minute is all that the Intramural permits. From Arrowhead Lake the course is eastward, with an irrigated farm on one side. There are shown the level fields and growing crops, the ditches, the measuring boxes, tanks and the entire irrigation system.

PALACE OF EDUCATION.

Many visitors carry away from the Exposition an impression that the grandest of exhibit buildings is the Palace of Agriculture. It stands on an elevation higher than other exhibit palaces, save that of Art and that of Horticulture. The ground slopes from it on both fronts and at the northern end. This palace is the largest exposition structure ever erected for a single department. It presents a front one-third of a mile in length. Its roof covers as much ground as is included in many truck farms. In every direction from the Palace of Agriculture are out-of-door exhibits pertaining to the department. There are ten acres of roses. There is a floral clock, the minute hand of which weighs 2,500 pounds. To walk the length of the aisle in the Palace of Agriculture means a tramp of four miles. Two acres are covered with the exhibits of breakfast foods.

On the north side of the Intramural is the Palace of Fish, Game and Forestry, 600 feet in length. Great pools occupy a considerable portion of the interior showing fish and water life of various kinds. The game includes groups of living birds.

Many things of interest are crowded on the vision as the route turns into Skinker road and southward. The pavilions of Canada and of Ceylon and the life-saving lake are on the right. On the left is the beautiful garden of Versailles with the Grand Trianon. From Skinker road there is a glimpse first of the great steel framed building, severely plain, occupied by the boilers and fuel. Within this building is born the power which stands for the concentrated pull of 400,000 horses. Beyond is the Palace of Machinery wherein is applied in countless ways that power. Makers of all that pertain to the generation and application of power have placed their products on duty to be judged as merits are shown by actual performance. Hundreds of thousands of square feet of space are occupied. Everywhere, save only the aisles, is the moving, working machinery. One engine is as large as an average three-story house. The power which runs the Intramural car comes from a collection of machinery exhibits supplied by exhibitors from five nations and from seven States.

Southward the car climbs a gentle slope from which in the distance can be seen a side view of the Colonnade of States and Festival Hall, the marble Palace of Art, which will be the enduring monument of the Exposition. Nearer are the walls of Jerusalem with the Mosque of Omar and the Temple rising above. Still nearer and on the brow of a hill overlooking the Exhibit Palaces is the collection of buildings which represents the Government of Japan. Overlooking the route of the Intramural on this stretch are the splendid mansion of the State of Illinois, the classic Temple of Fraternity, the Old Mission House of California, and a dozen other buildings. The car passes the great rose garden and the Palace of Horticulture in the midst of flower beds. It skirts the thrilling concession where leading battles of the Boer war are reproduced twice daily. It gives a view of the barns and pavilions where will be distributed live stock premiums aggregating $250,000. The course changes by a long curve into the wooded portion of Forest Park. There is a run of a couple of minutes through glades of magnificent forest trees. The south front of the Palace of Art is skirted. The log cabin which Ulysses S. Grant, a Missouri farmer, fifty years ago builded of logs is seen. Beyond are the walls of Fort Clatsop, reproduced, where Lewis and Clark wintered in 1805, at the end of their long journey to the mouth of the Columbia.

The Intramural is now on the borders of "The Gulch," where over twenty acres are scattered the outdoor mining exhibits. Here are a primitive Mexican copper mining camp, a typical Pennsylvania coal breaker, a coal mine and electric mine railway. Here are smelting, metal working and other noisy processes of the mineral industry.

The car climbs a grade along the southern front of the Inside Inn, where are sleeping accommodations for six thousand persons. The World's Fair visitor may live within the walls and divide his time between sight-seeing and rest as he chooses. Passing the Inside Inn the traveler reaches the eastern boundary of the World's Fair grounds and is on the Plateau of States. For half a mile and more the course parallels Commonwealth avenue and passes many of the forty-two state and territorial buildings scattered on eligible sites fronting upon winding roadways. Several of these buildings have from two hundred to three hundred feet frontage and represent an expenditure of about $100,000 each. They are planned and provided with facilities to entertain on a more lavish scale than has been known at any preceding Exposition. Some of the buildings possess much historical interest. Connecticut is represented by a typical colonial mansion, patterned after an original in Hartford. Virginia reproduces the Monticello of Jefferson, and Tennessee the Hermitage of Jackson. Mississippi has Beauvoir, where the last years of Jefferson Davis were spent; Georgia, the home of General Gordon. Washington's headquarters at Morristown stands for New Jersey's mansion.

Commonwealth avenue terminates in front of Missouri's World's Fair capital, a structure commensurate with the State's appropriation of $1,000,000. Just in front of Missouri and on a lower level, but still above the main picture, stands the great structure of the United States Government, but little smaller than the United States capitol. The work of the mail service, the minting of medals, the paper money making and the scientific bureaus and laboratories, the treasures of the museums, which are housed in the Government building, are only parts of the Government exhibits. Beyond the great structure are caught glimpses through the forest of the Fish Commission Building of the greatest bird cage ever built, of the sea coast battery and of other outdoor Government exhibits.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT BUILDING.

As the Intramural car glides down to the level of the Exhibit Palaces, it passes a camp of the sea soldiers, the battalion of Marines, the United States Field Hospital, the DeForest wireless telegraphy tower, and the Press Building, a reminder of the quaint character of architecture familiar when twelve States and two Territories were only the Lower and Upper Provinces of Louisiana.

A vista opens through the Triumphal Way and its Pylons in front of the high arches of Liberal Arts on the left. Farther on the vista is walled in by the flat roof and overhanging cornice and obelisks of Mines and Metallurgy and by the graceful colonnade of Education. It is closed by the eastern pavilion of the Colonnade of States and by the great German mansion on the hilltop. On the home stretch Manufactures Palace presents its 1,200 feet of facade as a background for the buildings of the Model Street, and here is the entrance, the same turnstile which clicked at the beginning of this tour of the World's Fair. The thirty-six minutes are up. It is the end of the route. The bird's-eye view of the World's Fair is complete.
