Baldino and Duncan face run-off

By Jim Austin

All the unopposed candidates were a shoe-in in last week's election while the only contested race will go into a run-off tomorrow.

The run-off will be between the two top vote getters in the race for the Freshman Class president, Joe Baldino (43 votes) and Anthony Duncan (23 votes), neither of whom received a majority. Mark Womack ran third with 22 votes.

Elected were Dennis Harper as Graduate Class president and Deborah Kurman for Graduate vice president. The offices of Graduate secretary, treasurer and senator remain unfilled and thus will be appointed by the Graduate president.

Elected to other Freshman Class offices were Julie Ross for secretary, Claire Covington as vice president and April Ulery and Mario Inzunza as Freshman Class Senators.

In the General ASB election, Jeff Baker won as judicial representative and Doug Cole, J. Gallen, Jane Heister and Mike Messer won as senators at large.

Among the winners in last weeks election was Graduate Class President and Vice President, Dennis Harper and Deborah Kurman.

CSUC Student Presidents Meet At Chico

By Diane Cassano

Student presidents from throughout the California State University and Colleges system gathered in Chico this past weekend for their monthly meeting.

Members of the California State University and Colleges Student Presidents Association (CSUCSPA) spent some 12 hours in meetings over the two-day period discussing such topics as the financial status of their organization, a proposed student writing skills test which would be required for graduation, library hours, and possible legislation which will affect students this year.

The student presidents spent about 45 minutes in a closed executive session Saturday morning, consulting with Chico State Associated Students General Manager Mark Bookman, an attorney, regarding their financial status.

Chico AS President Alan Myers explained to the Wildcat that last year, the SPA "wound up broke unexpectedly." The association's controller, LeMond Goodloe, who was a student president at San Francisco State at the time, told the SPA that it was in good financial condition, said Myers.

"But then he sort of dropped out of sight and stopped coming to our meetings," said Myers. A spot check of the association's bank account found its reserves had been depleted.

"We had a deficit," said Myers. As for the controller, Myers said that the association's efforts to find him have failed, thus far.

Following their executive session, James Ferguson, the new controller and student president of San Jose State University, announced that a certified public accountant and attorney would be retained to conduct an immediate audit of the 1975-76 financial condition of CSUCSPA.

In order to prevent a similar situation from happening again, Scott Plotkin, legislative advocate for CSUCSPA, recommended that the student presidents adopt a new banking system. Bank of America would issue the organization's checks and there should be no problem with accounting for the money spent.

However, Susan Patterson of Long Beach was not totally reassured and stated that her school will not be submitting its dues to CSUCSPA until the audit is completed to her satisfaction.

The dues from each of the member student presidents are 15 cents per student member in his respective student body associations.

It was noted that a Student Fees Task Force was set up to determine where student money is going and secondly, where student money should be going.

Chico State President Myers of CSUCSPA's educational policy committee reported on the student writing skills proficiency and diagnostic test supported by the Trustees over CSUCSPA's opposition.

"The need for the test has been demonstrated over the years by such articles as "Why Can't Johnny Read and Write," said Myers.

A remedial program is being proposed for those who score low on the test. Myers estimated that between one-fourth and one-half of all students would be required to take the remedial course, which will probably be given for no credit.

Myers pointed out that there are two main concerns with the test — racial and cultural bias and funding.

Myers stated that the Trustees feel that students should pay the 10 dollar test fee unless they are under financial aid.

"The whole concept of the test is ridiculous," said Kevin Gallagher, president at Cal State San Bernardino. "Ten dollars is an awful lot of money for a test, especially a computer test...Students are traditionally the most deprived economic segment of society."

Myers noted the exam will be in writing to a great extent, not computerized.

It was agreed that the association will still voice its objection to the test, especially to any mandatory fee.

Chico State student president Myers led the Educational Policies Committee discussion on the recent legal opinion of the Trustees declaring campus papers had to accept all advertising without discriminating and prohibited political endorsements, unless such endorsements are signed by individuals.

Myers said he felt personally under pressure when it became clear that Chico was being closely studied in this matter.

New Vet law signed

The Veterans Education and Employment Assistance Act of 1976 (PL-94-502), signed into law by President Ford on Oct. 15, sets a termination date for the nation's third GI Bill and opens a new era for veterans education benefits.

As explained by John G. Miller, Director of the Veterans Administration Regional Office in Los Angeles, the current GI Bill will not be available to persons who enter the armed services after December 31, 1976. Under that bill, 6.6 million veterans and active-duty members with military service since February 1, 1955, have received educational assistance from the VA. Veterans who are now eligible have until December 31, 1989 to complete training.

Offsetting the end of the present GI Bill eligibility, Miller said the new law created a voluntary contributory educational assistance program for persons initially entering military service after Dec. 31, 1976. Jointly operated by the Veterans Administration and the Department of Defense, the program will offer 36 months educational assistance entitlement with a 10-year delimiting date.

Participants in the new program may contribute $50 to $75 monthly from their salaries, up to a maximum $2,700. The contributions will be matched by the VA at the rate of $2 for every $1 made by the service member.

Miller said the new law also provided for an 8 percent increase in monthly allowances for all current training offered by the GI Bill, except flight training, retroactive to Oct. 1. The basic entitlement for trainees was extended from 36 to 45 months.

Prepayment of the monthly allowance was eliminated, effective June 1, 1977. Also, after June 1, advance payment at the start of training will be permitted only at the request of the trainee and provided the school agrees to comply with the requirements of the law.

Miller said other features of the new law include:

Increased maximum amount for education loans from $600 to $1,500;

Terminated enrollments and reenrollments by current active-duty members in predischarge education program (PREP) after Oct. 31, 1976. PREP will be available during last six months of first enlistment for service members who participate in new voluntary contributory education program;

Removed delimiting date for seriously disabled and blinded veterans enrolled in vocational rehabilitation training;

Prohibits an attorney-in-fact from negotiating benefit check as such action is considered as assignment.

The current GI Bill was effective June 1, 1966, providing educational assistance for eligible veterans who served on active duty after January 31, 1955. When all training under the bill has been terminated, its 23½-year life-span will have almost doubled that of each of its predecessors.

The World War II GI Bill ended July 25, 1956, after 12 years. Lifetime of the Korean Conflict GI Bill was 12½ years, ending January 31, 1965.

Cal State professors write book

A historian and a sociologist at Cal State, San Bernardino have joined forces to write a book on opposing forces: "Revolution and the Revolutionary Ideal."

In their book, Robert Blackey, professor of history and Clifford T. Paynton, professor of sociology, discuss how the concept of revolution has been altered from revolution to revolution and from theorist to theorist on five continents in the last 200 years.

Leadership, the use of violence, the treatment of the opposing faction, the use of technology are some of the variables discussed.

The book was written to be understood by the layman who has no prior knowledge of the subject, but it has already been adopted for classroom use by Duke University and Kansas State University according to Blackey.

The two men wrote the book on the currently popular subject at the request of the publisher, Schenkman Publishing Co., Cambridge, Mass. It is available in hardback and paperback.

Blackey and Paynton are editors of a book of readings on causes of revolution, "Why Revolution?". Blackey also published a bibliography on revolutions, "Modern Revolutions and Revolutionists," earlier this year.

Counseling available

Helping troubled people, from teenagers through senior citizens, with personal problems is a goal for the Community Counseling Center at California State College, San Bernardino.

The services of the center, a function of the psychology department, are open to all without charge, according to Dr. Christopher O'Hare, director.

"If the kind of service we can provide is not appropriate to the individual's problem, we will find the right service or agency to help him," he added.

The counselors are graduate students in the Master of Science in psychology program at the college. They are supervised by faculty members who hold Ph.D. degrees in psychology or are licensed clinical and counseling psychologists.

"All of the counseling is strictly confidential," stressed Dr. O'Hare. Anyone 18 years or older may come for help. Appointments should be made by calling the center of Dr. O'Hare at the college (887-7220 or 887-7272).

The Community Counseling Center, the only free service of its kind in the area, was launched last year by O'Hare. Many people sought help, he said.

The center was particularly active in counseling of couples, including pre-marital counseling, child-rearing questions, problems arising from the "classic triangle," and stresses due to personal relationships.

The counselors also work with individuals. Some are women in their middle years who feel lost or unwanted when their children are in school and they have no career of their own. A number of lonely senior citizens, "who really don't know what to do with their lives," have sought out the Community Counseling Center, said O'Hare.

In the instances of the senior citizens, referrals often are made to other agencies which are expert in meeting their needs.

The personal problems which bring people to the counseling center range from death and illness in the family, to educational and vocational problems or to extreme fears and anxieties.

With the consent of parents, the counselors can work with teachers about learning or behavioral problems in the children.

The counselor-trainees in the center consult with other members of the psychology faculty, drawing upon their various areas of specialization. Some faculty members, for example, have done research in the field of gerontology; others are interested in the problems of women or of adolescents.

O'Hare, a clinical psychologist who has worked in clinics or in private practice for about five years, conducts the initial interview of all individuals coming to the center. He selects the counselor to work with the person or makes the referral to other agencies.

O'Hare is director of graduate programs in the psychology department. The college currently offers an M.A. in psychology with a concentration in general-experimental psychology and an M.S. in psychology with a concentration in counseling. It is exploring the possibility of offering an interdisciplinary M.A. in human development, which would include psychology, education, anthropology, biology and sociology.

Anyone wishing further information on the Community Counseling Center may consult with Dr. O'Hare about services available there. When the center is not staffed, the caller may leave his name and number on the telephone message system.

Assembly Ed Committee

The Assembly Education Committee will hold two days of interim hearings in San Diego on Nov. 15 and 16 on the subjects of school principals and staff development for certificated personnel.

The purpose of the Nov. 15 hearing is to examine the training, responsibilities, evaluation and continuing professional development of principals. The Committee wishes to determine whether existing administrator training programs adequately prepare principals for their responsibilities, how school districts evaluate the performance of school site administrators, and whether increased attention and resources should be devoted to on-the-job training for principals.

At the Nov. 16 hearing, the committee will review current in-service programs and funding and discuss proposed legislation designed to increase teacher and administrator participation in inservice education.

The hearings will be held at the San Diego State Building, 1350 Front Street, room B109 and will commence at 9:30 a.m. Testimony will be by invitation only. Those wishing to testify should notify the Committee office at (916) 445-7807.

Student Presidents

He noted that Chico hopes to get around policy by giving the "Wildcat" an independent status. A committee has been set up to investigate the feasibility of divorcing the "Wildcat" from the Associated Students. He feels that if sufficient progress is shown towards these ends, CSUC President Stanford Cazier will hold off enforcing the Trustees' opinion.

It was noted that at the Trustees' meeting last month, Trustee Frank Adams stated that all campus newspapers should be under the respective journalism departments, where they could be controlled by the university presidents.

Myers warned the student presidents to be wary of such "off the wall" attitudes.

He warned the rest of the student presidents to be careful, arguing that if even one campus paper is out of line the Trustees could very well pass some kind of blanket policy affecting all papers in the system.

The meeting then discussed how the various campuses were implementing a recent Trustees' directive calling for student participation in the faculty retention, tenure and promotion (RTP) process.

It was revealed that students were participating on only about half of the campuses. On some campuses, it was pointed out, the directive was not being implemented in good faith, and students were being excluded from further involvement in RTP.

It was noted that students are often afraid to sign evaluation forms because possible retaliation by teachers at grading time.

Also, teachers may charge student retaliation for bad grades.

Scott Plotkin noted that CSUSPA's original intentions of getting students involved in the evaluation process seems to have been undermined.

"There is something different going on at each campus," he said, recommending that the presidents adopt an explanatory memo in hopes of statewide uniformity.

"After working so hard to get students involved in RTP," said Kevin Gallagher of San Bernardino, "we're getting tokened out."

Scott Plotkin reported on his proposed legislative program for the SPA.

Among the bills introduced or to be introduced is an amendment to the Education Code which authorize the use of parking revenue funds for the acquisition, construction, operation and maintenance of alternative methods of transportation on the system's campuses.

Plotkin also announced that he intended to continue pushing legislation that would take ultimate control over student activity fees hands of the campus presidents and give it to the student governments.

He then announced his intention to introduce legislation to allow students to increase student activity fees by specific amounts for specific purposes (e.g., $1 per year for a day care center) provided 30 per cent of the students vote.

Two previous bills which were passed only after considerable difficulty only to be vetoed by Governor Brown, who among other things claimed that low voter turnout diminished the value of student election results. The present maximum of $20 per year has been in effect for more than two decades.

One association member asked, "Why can't the 30 per cent qualification be added to one of the vetoed bills and then reintroduce it?"

"That's a possibility," Plotkin responded.

Plotkin is also recommending that the association support bills which would forbid discrimination in housing because of being a student.

He also noted that he will do his best to insure that intercollegiate athletics is viewed as an institutionally related activity (IRA) and thus funded out of state IRA monies rather than student fees. He encouraged the presidents to have their athletics directors support this position and to relay written comments to him.

Finally, Plotkin encouraged each student president to cultivate good relationships with local legislators and to try to develop same with local Trustees.

Editor's Note: Diane Cassano is a reporter for "The Wildcat," of Cal. State Chico. The student papers at each of the colleges where CSUCSPA is meeting will hopefully be covering the event for the other State Universities and Colleges. CSUCSPA will be meeting at this campus this month.

The Stranger Drank Beer

By Dave Fowler

One Sunday morning, I sat in the bar trying to get started on my weekly column. I thought and I scribbled, but I got nowhere. Nothing would come. No bad jokes popped into my mind for elaboration, no humorous ironies from the news came up.

I was stuck.

My drinking buddies, Biggy and Potted Palm, sat a little ways down the bar from me, by the taps, with their backs to the bar, and watched Roger the bar owner sweep up the floor. Every time he passed back or forth, they would bend their elbows and swallow the rest of their glasses. They were on their tenth or twelfth toast.

Otherwise, it was a very fine morning. It was quiet; it was peaceful; the weather was nice; it promised to be a great day, as soon as I finished my writing.

Suddenly, from out in front of the building, we heard a high-pitched whirring sound, like a helicopter sound without the flap from the blades chopping the air. We rushed to the door to see whatever it was, just in time to see a spaceship come to rest in the parking lot. I immediately ran back to the bar and got my pen and pad for notetaking.

We knew that the craft was a spaceship. It was a brightly shining silver disc, symmetrically thicker at the poles than at the edges. It was about ten feet wide and five feet thick in the middle. Three spindly antennas poked out of its topside. It rested on three foot long legs.

"More beer!" shouted Potted Palm, a certain amount of hysteria in his voice.

A panel opened out from the underside of the spaceship, and the unhinged edge lowered to the ground. From this open hatch rolled a four-foot long, mousy brown thing. It looked like a hollow tree trunk. There was no head or body, just a tube.

As soon as the thing hit the ground, six filament sized arms stuck out from the underside of the trunk and pushed up so fast that it seemed like one instant the thing was horizontal and in the next, it was vertical.

"Do you serve alcohol here?" asked the thing. Its voice was that of an IBM 4600 with vocal capabilities, that slow, soft, melodious, unreal, I-will-take-care-of-all-of-your-problems voice.

We didn't see a mouth move or a speaker plate vibrate. It might have telepathy, but we could not later decide.

"Uh, uh," fumbled Roger, "uh, oh-whoa-whoanly beer."

"Fine, that will do."

The thing began to move toward us. It didn't hop along or shimmy; it floated, two inches off the ground, and drifted. Maybe it was levitation; maybe it was a soundless, out-of-sight propulsion unit. Don't ask me; I'm only a journalist. I can't explain impossible science fiction creatures.

Once the thing had moved into the building and up to the bar, and had ascended to a stool, it asked Roger, "What kind of beer do you have on tap?"

"Ca-Coors," answered Roger, weakly.

"Oh yes, the legendary beer of the American West. Well perhaps it will be as good as Abstrako or Kozmogony Light. Yes, I would like some, please."

"Abstrako? Koz-what? What are those?"

"They are Martian beers, the very best. They have superb tastes and excellent textures."

"You're a Martian?"

"Yes, of course."

Biggy and I had recovered some wit and had tucked our eyeballs back in, and had also made our way to the bar. Potted Palm had collapsed upon the pool table. He was drooling and moaning: the incredulous event had snapped his mind.

Roger served up a glass of Coors and set it before the Martian. With its thin, thin arms, the Martian lifted the glass to the top of its head and poured the beer into its hollow insides. No beer leaked out of its bottom onto the stool, so something happened to it, God knows what.

"Um," said Biggy, trying to speak, "um, do all Martians look like you?"

"Yes, they do. Haven't you ever seen a Martian before? More beer, please."

Being a writer, I had quickly noticed that the alien spoke impeccable American English. "Mr. Martian, you speak remarkably good English. How is that?"

Before replying, the Martian drank its second glass of beer, drinking it as before. Since there was a long pause between the consumption and the Martian's speaking, I assume that a process of some sort took place. "I didn't think that I'd find anyone here who speaks High Martian, so I learned Californian."

"But how did you learn it?"

"We Martians have telemetered Earth for centuries. We have a superior civilization to yours."

"But there's no life on Mars," exclaimed Biggy. "It's just a desert planet, full of sand and rocks. I saw the photographs that the Viking landers sent back. There's no civilization on Mars."

"Yes, it does look that way, doesn't it? Indeed, we do have a superior civilization."

That stopped Biggy for a moment, but he bounced back with a new topic. "What are you doing here on Earth?"

The Martian didn't answer quickly. It paused, then said in a low, guilty, monotone, "I'm drinking beer. I have done a bad thing, and now I must drink to forget."

"To forget?" wailed Potted Palm from the pool table, "What did you do?"

"You will tell no other Earthlings?"

"Of course not," I said, slyly pushing pad and pen out of the Martian's view, assuming it had eyes that I couldn't see.

"I have prevented you Earthlings from landing on and colonizing Mars in the foreseeable future."

"What!" roared Biggy. "You miserable tree trunk! What right have you got to meddle with our future?"

"I live on Mars. Where Mars is concerned, I am concerned."

"Oh, well..." apologized Biggy. "What did you do?"

"I went to your local college, Cal-Strait, to the records office, and falsified some records. A certain student who was enrolled in Psychology 100 is now enrolled in Music 180."

"And that's going to keep us off Mars? How?"

"The student will not learn of this until it is too late to change back to the psychology class, and will consequently begin attending music classes. The student will flunk, and flunk out of school, and never learn a certain bit of information that is taught in the tenth week of the psychology course. That single piece of information would have led that student to fame and glory, and Mars to being colonized by Earthlings."

"You're rotten," shrieked Biggy. "How can you know the future, know what's going to happen?"

"What do you know of the mathematics of the predicative science of psychohistory?"

"Uh, nothing."

"Then there's no point in my trying to explain it to you. You wouldn't understand. But be assured, we have pinpointed the solution to our problem. There are no variables through which we can do a wrong thing."

"What did you say that information was," asked Biggy, lightly, cagily.

"You don't really expect me to tell you, I hope. He would write it down and it would be printed for all Earthlings to see — Yes, I see you making those notations and I know what they are." I grinned sheepishly, and copied down the statement verbatim.

"Well, who is this person whose record you changed?"

The Martian float-descended to the floor. "Yes, the beer has been fine. I shall forget all of this on the way home."

"Who is it?" insisted Biggy.

"A potentially great and valued member of your society, but a real estate claim jumper of the worst sort, nonetheless."

"Is it a man or a woman?"

"You must think we Martians are fools if you expect me to fall into that trap. Oh no, I cannot tell you if he is a man or woman."

"Who is it?," screamed Biggy.

"Goody day, good-bye," said the Martian.

"The rulebook on humans does not say that I have to resolve your problems."

"But you can't run away without giving me a climax to my story, a clincher, a blow-off to provide purgation and relief!"

"Ta ta," said the Martian. And it floated out of the front door.

On the behalf of all my readers, I jumped to my feet and ran to the door. "Wait! Come back! You anti-literary ratfink, you can't do this to me!"

But the door to the spaceship had closed. The craft made its whirring sound and lifted straight up into the sky, and soon vanished from sight.

We spent that great afternoon forgetting what we had seen, for we know the one would believe us.

Can State Afford Proposition 14?

By Ray Byers

Election day in California, if the media is correct, will find a few people observing the presidential race, but the majority will be watching the fate of Proposition 14, the Agricultural Labor Relations Initiative. This controversial initiative has created more dissent and discussion in the state than any other subject for some time. The United Farm Workers, which is backing the proposition, and the organization of growers have been sniping at each other for months.

Cesar Chavez, head of the United Farm Workers, filed a formal complaint with the Federal Communications Commission, on Oct. 18, against the airing of commercial seeking to defeat passage of Proposition 14 on the November ballot.

Chavez called the ads "false and deceptive" when they said Proposition 14 would destroy the personal freedoms and basic property rights of all other Californians.

Section 1152.2, Chapter 3, of Proposition 14 states that union organizers will have the right of access to the premises of an agricultural employer for the purpose of organizing the workers. Organizers will be authorized to enter the property each day for 60 minutes before the start of work, 60 minutes at the completion of work and one additional hour during the day to talk to the employees during their lunch hour. If there is no established lunch hour, the organizers may enter the property at any time during the working day for one hour.

This would, in effect, create the need for every farmer employing agricultural workers to create a lunch period of one hour so the organizers could enter his property and talk to the employees. If there was no established lunch hour and the workers stopped and ate at different times there would be nothing to prevent the organizers from coming on the grower's property an hour before quitting time and stop the work to talk to all the workers, claiming their right under the law. Proposition 14 doesn't say the organizers will talk to the employees while they eat lunch, unless there is an established lunch period. This could be rather disruptive to the grower.

Any disruption, however, has been taken into consideration by the drafters of the proposition. Section 1152.2e states that the organizers' conduct will not disrupt the employer's property or operation; but, it goes on to say, "speech will not be considered disruptive." The section goes into further detail by stating that disruptive conduct on the part of the organizers will not be grounds for expelling them from the grower's property, or preventing their future access onto the property again.

The agricultural workers already have the right to unionize if they so desire. There appears to be no logical reason the union organizers have to come onto the grower's property to contact the workers and tell them about the union. To dispose of this problem, which seems to be the biggest complaint the growers have against the proposition, why can't the organizers meet with the workers in a park, a theater, their homes, or in a church?

I think it is a fair certainty that if you gathered together all the agricultural workers in the state of California that were unaware of the recent unionizing attempts by the United Farm Workers and the Teamsters and what they were promising to do for the workers, you would probably have difficulty in finding enough people to hold a game of Gin Rummy.

One of the procedures the United Farm Workers has found especially useful in their fight to be recognized as the bargaining agent for all the farm workers is the secondary boycott. There has been a lot of discussion, pro and con, as to whether this was legal because unions are forbidden to use the secondary boycott under the National Labor Relations Act. Since agricultural workers do not come under the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Act, they have felt justified in using it. They do this by picketing grocery stores selling produce not picked by the UFW in an attempt to prevent the public from patronizing the store and persuade the merchant to buy only produce picked by their union. The United Farm Workers have been able to bring enough public pressure on a large enough number of merchants to coerce the growers into submitting to their demands.

If Proposition 14 passes, there will be no more debate over whether the secondary boycott is right or wrong. Section 1154 sanc-

Politics in a dumpster

By Dan R. Clint

I was walking through the litter strewn around trash containers in a back-alley in Riverside. As I waded through a particularly thick clump of ticker tapes and other paper products I thought, "This is just the garbage of our bureaucratic super-structure, it really doesn't have anything to do with me." It was then I heard it. "It" was a faint clapping, a muffled applause.

I went to a nearby dumpster and peered in. There was a tiny little room filled with a crowd of people sitting at white table-clothed banquet tables.

I looked closer. There were Martini glasses on the tables and a small Japanese man was standing at the podium.

I listened to the man as well as I could. He had a microphone to make his voice sound very large. He looked friendly enough. He was talking about becoming a Senator in California.

Ah yes, Dr. S. I. Hayakawa, a jolly little man, a good candidate for Santa Claus, an educated and serious man who has excelled in the field of semantics.

He was recommending a revision of the labor laws, saying a child learns to become an adult by working at competitive adult jobs.

Yes, it was the same Dr. Hayakawa who was the one time controversial college president who rode around the San Francisco campus yelling into another microphone, demanding that the students stop their rioting madness, but then, that was another trash can.

I've always had a fondness for Hayakawa's books and essays. He's always seemed to make such proper sense out of the trash he's caught up in, and now seeing him in person at the Raincross Square in Riverside I saw he was still making proper sense out of the political confusion.

I am quite fascinated by politicians, not just Hayakawa but all politicians. They can make the most complex problems look so incredibly simple. They can put their heads down and then look back up with an answer as if from divine inspiration. They can avoid defining exactly, which must be very interesting for one like Hayakawa who has made such contributions to defining English.

Hayakawa ran through a series of issues like a practiced weasel which showed that he was obviously shrewd and "the right man for the job."

He would make statements like: "I am proud to say at this time that my ethnic background has not been mentioned either for or against me," and then he went on to further mention his ethnic background by saying he was happily pleased that in just a few short decades after Pearl Harbor we are seriously considering a Japanese candidate for Senator. (What about the Japanese and their ability to forget Hiroshima? But then that's another trash-bin.)

Oddly, Dr. Hayakawa took a very firm NO stand on Proposition 14. It seems he doesn't want to impose powerful police-type controls on the farmers. He said we already have enough problems enforcing present legislation and there is no need for a local legislation of this type but instead we need nation-wide legislation.

Dr. Hayakawa doesn't want farm labor too tightly controlled. Why? Because the illegal immigrants who come across the border are made of the same fiber that our ancestors were made of. He suggests control by the issuing of permits to aliens so that they won't be "illegal." Besides, "They will do the work that the white and black people won't do." If you don't

Letters To The Editor

Kommander Korn for President

PawPrint Editor:

Occasionally in life we are privileged to glimpse greatness and rarely, still, we might even have some contact with this same greatness. Such has been my experience.

I am speaking of my association with one of the finest, most noble, patriotic, self-sacrificing young gentlemen I have ever known — Kommander Korn. This same fine person, in his usual spirit of dedication to duty, is campaigning for President.

Naturally, you will hear little of Kommander Korn's campaign activities in the daily newspapers, and, of course, the TV and radio will ignore him altogether. This is because the media is fearful of their reputation. They are well aware that once the public is the least bit informed and knowledgeable of Kommander Korn's very active career and devotion to "just plain decency," they will flock to the polls in November in support of Kommander Korn and his lofty program and the news media will look like absolute fools.

As a mother I can only admire and envy the fine woman whose privilege and honor it was to give to the world this most remarkable young man.

It is with the utmost pleasure I jump on Kommander Korn's bandwagon. I urge everyone on the Campus to move out into the community and spread the message. Our only hope is the PawPrint to assist in enlightening the public. Let the nation know that our Kommander is indeed here, to stand at the helm and guide our ship over the troubled waters and lead us as we've never been led before.

I should hope that all concerned persons will contact Kommander Korn and volunteer to do whatever is necessary to get our last great hope elected to the highest office in the land. Just the fact that he has elected to run for the highest office in the land should be an inspiration to all of us. The possibility of such an outstanding candidate being available and willing will probably not occur again in our lifetime — how appropriate that it should happen during the bicentennial year. I cannot emphasize too strongly the urgency of the situation. Only an informed citizenry can vote intelligently — learn the facts and you will cast your vote for KOMMANDER KORN!!

Sincerely,
Marilyn Goldstein,
Member — Concerned-Citizens for this Country-in Support of Kommander Korn (CCC-SKK)

Dubious anarchist

Dear Editor:

Why did Lyn Kinsky, Libertarian candidate for Senate and avowed philosophical anarchist, fail to create more of a stir on campus during her recent visit(s)? Surely anarchism is an interesting philosophy!? I think this question merits a little consideration.

Philosophically, I am an anarchist too. Yet one of the great anarchists, Peter Kropotkin, said that all wealth including property was based upon robbery — robbery of the many by the few, robbery of the whole by the part. You see, there are many sorts of anarchist, communitarian anarchist being one, and a dominant one. Emma Goldman, Paul Goodman, Alex Comfort, Karl Shapiro — all good anarchists, yet not one would say that Nelson Rockefeller is rightfully rich while his employees — those whose labor he lives off — are poor; not one would argue that his or her earnings were made independently of any other person and therefore entirely his own. Ideally this might be the case, but it is not, nor has it been. Certainly

P. J. Proudhon, the father of "anarchism," the coiner of the word and the author of the statement "Liberty not the daughter but the mother of order," would turn over in his grave if he were informed that property rights were natural rights — that a corporation's ownership of 10,000 acres while 10,000 people paid rent was the natural, inalienable, human order of things. As I think of it, even individualist anarchists such as Josiah Warren and Benjamin Tucker — who advocated a society of villages filled with small-businessmen and small-farmers voluntarily cooperating — would be appalled.

To sum, if Ms. Kinsky's message was received with silence, it is not because there are no anarchists left in the world, but that anarchists, being anarchists, are dubious of those who use the word.

Yours faithfully,
S. Pearce Killian
Anarcho-syndicalist candidate for the
U. S. Senate

Appreciation

I would like to take this time to express my appreciation to all of you who voted, and to all who selected me at the polls. As you know by now, I did not win the election. I was short 2 percent of the total vote. To put it simply, I needed 3 more votes to take the election. 88 freshmen voted, 22 people voted for Mark Womack, 23 people voted for Anthony Duncan, and 43 people voted for me.

For the up-coming runoff election, I hope that the support I got on Oct. 27 and 28 will be just as strong, if not stronger.

I've worked very hard for this position and I believe all of you

A visit to the past

By Cheryl Brown

The purpose of Dr. Leon Litack's Multi-Media Presentation at Cal State on Oct. 20 was to give his American history students at UC Berkeley a feeling for that particular period.

And that he did.

He combined slides and film in a montage of images that gave the viewer a feel for the 1930's, and also the '50's and '60's. The sound was the sound of the period. No narration was used: only music and voices speaking the thoughts and feelings of the time.

Of the two presentations, the one of the 1930's was made last. A persistent theme throughout this fifty minute "history lesson" was the Depression. There were breadlines upon breadlines, the most ironic one being a line of blacks waiting in front of a billboard that supposedly depicted the "happy American family" enjoying their healthy and fulfilled life. By matching images of breadlines with those of the enormous, magnificent and happy musicals of the same period, Litack successfully conveyed the message that the people did not want to be reminded (in their entertainment) of what was going on in the real world.

Other reminders of the 30's included Hitler and a hilarious imitation of him by Charlie Chaplin, baseball, unions and strikes, Roosevelt, part of the Orson Well's Martian invasion broadcast, the victims of the Dustbowl, and the hundreds of Flash Gordon type magazines and movies, pictures of which were flashed on one of the three screens in rapid succession.

"The 1945-70 sequence," Litack commented between presentations, "was made first." "It is a very impressionistic view of the time span." The music of the '50's and '60's filtered through scenes depicting how drugs, TV, the "sexual revolution," violence, and the Vietnam War had all affected our lives. Rock n' roll and Chuck Berry; Elvis; Dylan, Joan Baez and the protest movement; Jimi Hendrix; with his interpretation of the "Star-Spangled Banner" — which is a moving statement of where many of the 1960's youth were at — these were all included, as were the Beatles and the effects of Beatlemania on changing the culture.

The second presentation of the '50's and '60's moved much faster with the music having much more intensity than that of the '30's. This, I think was a deliberate move to show the change that had taken place in our society. The '60's presentation was more difficult to watch, more disturbing than the first.

But what went on in the '60's was difficult to watch. What is important, I think about this whole multi-media presentation, is that it capsulized in two hours for those who remember the '30's, and one hour for those who have been through the '50's and '60's only what has been going on in our world, whether we want to realize it or not. And, as was depicted in the final slides of the presentation, these events can have an effect upon us — that of becoming alienated from the real world.

tions the use of the secondary boycott by a labor organization, if that organization is currently certified as the representative of the employees working for the grower who produced the food.

If passed, Proposition 14 will lock into law a requirement to spend money, which will cost the taxpayers of the state an enormous amount. The big question that faces each voter in California, in regards to the proposition is, can I afford it?

One of the first requirements of the proposition is the establishment of an Agricultural Labor Relations Board. This board will consist of five members, appointed by the governor, for a term of five years. Each member of the board will be guaranteed an annual salary of $42,500.

This expenditure is only the first required by the proposition, and a drop in the bucket. The board will set up its principal office in Sacramento, but they "may establish offices in such other cities as it shall deem necessary."

The board is also authorized to appoint an executive secretary and such attorneys, administrative law officers, hearing officers and other employees as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper performance of its duties.

The governor is also required to appoint a general counsel for the board to serve for a term of four years. Section 1149, Chapter 2, Part 3.5, of the proposition states, "The general counsel shall have the power to appoint such attorneys, administrative assistants, and other employees as necessary for the proper exercise of his duties."

The establishment of all these offices and the personnel to staff them will increase the budget costs. Everyone is well aware that people working in state civil service positions are not paid in peanuts — or grapes — and once an organization or board like this becomes established, it never diminishes in size.

Over six million dollars has already been appropriated from the state's general fund for the administration of this program if it becomes law.

In the event this should not be enough money for the board to operate with, the drafters of the proposition provided for a transference in Section 3, Chapter 8, which states, "The Legislature shall appropriate such amounts to the Agricultural Labor Relations Board as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the board." There is no limit to the amount of money the board can spend and the Legislature will have no control to stop it.

If this initiative becomes law the voters may find they have given birth to a fiscal Frankenstein and the only way to stop the flood of money from the treasury would be through another vote of the people.

Once something like this becomes law and is implemented for any length of time, trying to get enough votes to repeal it would be like trying to get the populace to put a stop to farm subsidies and the welfare program.

Backpack to tranquility

By Frank Moore

Well, the CSCSB Escape '76 Backpack to Lion Trail Camp did not quite pan out as expected. For one thing, we never did reach the trail camp (thanks to the leader and author of this article) due to a mistake in our bearings. But it was worth it. At least, I think so.

The group ended up climbing a mountain pass from where we descended into some wild back country. We had it all to ourselves! Sleeping camp was set up in a little meadow, and the kitchen down by a little brook.

The weather was balmy all weekend with a fresh rain scent hanging in the air. The scenery was far superior to the confines of Lion Camp, and it was for us alone. Worth climbing a mountain for? There were varied (mostly unprintable) opinions, but no one was disappointed.

Don't miss our Nov. 20 hike to Sugar Pine Mountain, just up the road. Apply at SS No. 173.

Dumpster politics

believe it look at the long lists of jobs in the newspaper and the unemployment rate.

Dr. Hayakawa has obviously never tried to raise a family of four on a two-dollar-an-hour job, which is a cliché in response to a cliché.

Well, Proposition 14 has been a source of confusion for me, but perhaps we can play reverse politician and say underpaid workers will be paid more, there will subsequently be tighter controls on workers and more duties for the farmers, and therefore we will have to pay for this by having our food prices rise. The truth is the workers deserve more pay since inevitably they have to pick up the trash.

In some abstract sense perhaps our real power lies in our inability to be led. Yes, we follow these politicians and try to discover who is the better, more honest man. Yes, we are influenced by their speeches even though they are only saying what they have wisely selected to say. Our inability to be led will ultimately provide us with true freedom or perhaps it will weaken us when the time demands we work together.

We are only as effective as our politicians are honest and we as people will "whim" them in and out of office. We are buried in trash heaps of political issues while our solid gold system of democracy has the ring of filthy lucre. We are being pulled over obstacles by a few thousand smiling hand waving people who struggle diligently to get our small votes.

The final act of Dr. Hayakawa was to don his colorful cap, his symble, to demonstrate that he was, after all, only a performer on the political stage.

The crowd poured from the dumpster and resumed their lives, the really serious questions like will they get back to work on time, or what brand of lipstick looks best, or how are we going to pay all of the bills? This is the political theater, where people gather socially as well as politically and where few things are taken too seriously.

The tiny crowd dispersed scattering the trash over the blacktopped parking lot of a desert where their lives and fears replace the primitive other lives of two hundred years ago.

FLAG FOOTBALL PANTIWAIST

It was a cold, wintry October afternoon as the Crestline Cougars lined up opposite the Try-ers to do gladiatorial battle.

No, this isn't a book by Homer, or a Cecil B. DeMille movie.

The battlefield is not the Coliseum in Rome. The names of the gladiators aren't Achilles or Ulysses, but Cap'n Doug and Kommander Korn to name a few.

The game isn't kill, unless someone dies laughing.

This is the Cal State Pantiwaist Football game between the Cougars and the Try-ers. A game that saw a Cougar defense led by Peggy "Too Tall" Thomas and Carrol "How's the Weather Down There" Day hold the Try-ers' one-man armada Dennis "Jim Thorpe" Mendonca to a meager one touchdown.

The Cougars' offense, besides the Gayle Sayers of Pantiwaistdom in Kommander Korn, had a new field general. He is Mike "Drive Ya' Home a Deal" Shaffer who is affectionately known by his friends, I mean friend, as "Brainless."

After a shaky first half, he led the Cougars by ripping the Try-ers' defense with pinpoint passes in the second half enroute to a 24 to 12 win.

The second Pantiwaist encounter saw Marla Myers' M M Goods crush sibling Connie's EBA's 25 to 6.

Marla's animals showed no mercy to poor Connie's kids as the Goods marched up and down the field at will throughout the contest.

Dave "Dave's Not Here" Amori and Ron "the Hippie" Hanke led the balanced Goods offense, while Roger "Butt Plug" Odle and Bruce "the Hammer" Hammerstein stymied the less than potent EBA offense.

The EBA's spirit and enjoyment of the game can best be illustrated by their fearless leader who during the game could be heard cheering to the offense from the sideline, "All right, team, we caught the center, we're half-way there."

A pass from Miles "the Snake" Bogh to Chuck "Adhesive Hands" Sanchez accounted for the EBA's single tally.

Black and Blue

You Black and Bluers didn't go to church on Sunday, and He got you for it.

Last week's games were rained out. Can't handle a little water, huh, kiddies?

THREE-PERSON BASKETBALL "B" LEAGUE

There were spectators fainting from shock last week as the powerful J.D.L. led by "Doctor C," Connie "The Hawk" Myers, were destroyed by the "I Don't Cares" led by Hector "Stretch" Guzman and Rusty "the Chump" Shoup.

The games were close, the two teams exchanging baskets until the "I Don't Cares" double teamed "Doctor C" leaving Jim "the Cripple" Given open.

Jim could not pick up the slack, and Jim Roessler, though battling hard, was being out rebounded by Joe Long and Rusty Shoup, this and an offensive barrage by Hector Guzman led to the J.D.L.'s demise.

The real key note to this game was probably the leaping blocks of "Doctor C's" 2 hand set shots by Rusty "the Chump" Shoup.

Next-week's big game has Beneke's boys, the B-Bombers vs. the Ringers, I mean, the Misfits led by "A" leaguers Al Diaz, Tim Olsen, Rich Adams and Steve Hernandez.

The B-Bombers' only chance is if the Misfits can't concentrate on the game because of the gorgeous legs of the Misfits' newest member, Diane Bloecker.

"A" LEAGUE

The big story in the "A" League game of the week was that Francois McGinnis, the Freshmen's one-man offense, can and did make a pass. (During the game.)

He threw the ball to Seakerise Tuatoo who in turn made a lay-up.

But it was too much to ask to see anymore than that one pass in the Freshmen's 2 out of 3 wins over Manko.

Manko, who had Ron Miller and Greg Thompson take turns trying to stop McGinnis, but both obviously were less than successful.

Ivan "Truck" Glasco could not counteract McGinnis and his good team (?) play.

Next week we will see Bob "Teach" Blackey and his crew play Francois McGinnis.

Oops! I mean the Freshmen.

SPORT SHORTS

Rugby anyone?

Are there any female "animals" on this campus? Would any of you girls like to take a "legal" swing at some other of your "fairer" sex?

If you answer yes to either or both of these questions then I've got just what you need.

The Riverside Rugby Club needs women for its newly formed team.

Practices are on Sundays at 4 p.m. on the UCR Soccer field. Games will be played against other clubs from throughout the state. So come on girls, "get brutal."

Jack Nicklaus,

where are you?

If he was a student here at Cal State there would be no doubt that Jack Nicklaus would be in our big golf tourney.

Rumor has it that Jack was about to enroll at Cal State just so he could play in our prestigious tourney. But he found out the infamous "Dover Boys" would be in it and, yes, Ben's kids scared good ol' Nick off.

Don't let them scare you off.

It's again time for that hallowed event, the Cal State 9-hole golf tourney will be held from Nov. 5 to 14.

Play your 9 holes one of those days, then bring your scorecard signed by a witness to Room PE-124 by Nov. 15, 1976. Results will be posted the following day.

In conclusion, all of your support will be greatly appreciated and you will not be sorry you voted for me. I thank all of you for your sincere interest in the freshmen class.

We would like to express our concern about the fact that very few Chicanos are interested in attending MECHA meetings. Some of us at some level do not identify with the word or concept "Chicano." Some of us might have a completely different idea as to what a Chicano "should or should not be," and, there are possibly some of us who are completely indifferent. Actually you could say that of most groups, but whatever might cause the feeling of indifference, only you know. We would be interested to hear your arguments on this position.

So, why don't you come and express your views and give us new ideas and goals for the betterment of this club because MECHA could have a greater impact on school life for the Chicano here at CSCSB, if only you would get involved.

Sincerely,
MECHA

Library to show

"Holiday"

A real entertainment 'sleeper' is the Library's film classic series. Top stars of yesterday prove that they aren't making films like they used to.

Today's "Holiday" with Katherine Hepburn and Cary Grant starts at 1 p.m. in the Listening Facility on the Library's fourth floor.

These two legendary stars of Hollywood's heyday are still up and about. Hepburn currently starring in Enid Bagnold's "A Matter of Gravity" at the Ahmanson Theater in Los Angeles' Music Center, and will be there through Nov. 27 — unless they extend the sell-out run.

Grant, now a director of Faberge, spends his time urging people to smell good.

These two stellar performers have racked up a record that will stand forever. Twenty-eight of Grant's motion pictures have played Radio City Music Hall. Hepburn holds second place with 22 of her films shown there. The records will never be topped because it was recently announced that Radio City Music Hall will be torn down.

So, grab a quick shot of Geritol and take in "Holiday." It's a memorable movie that your parents probably saw. If you can't make the 1 p.m. Tuesday showing, there will be a re-run at 10 a.m. Wednesday.

And remember, for the classic film series you're invited to bring your lunch and enjoy an indoor picnic while watching yesterday's film glory.

Rally winner predicted

Rallymaster Dave Fowler predicts that an amateur rallyist will win his Dummy's Car Rally, being held Thursday, Nov. 4, starting at 1:30 p.m. in the Serrano Village parking lot.

"I set up the course," said Fowler, "so that $5,000 worth of rally equipment in a $15,000 sports car will not necessarily win out over a $100 Chevy on its last legs. It could happen, but I doubt it." He explained that the equipment used in setting up the course would provide this probability.

Fowler also explained that previous rally experience would probably help, since rallyists are used to following obscure and misleading directions, and are used to controlling their speeds carefully. But common sense would make up for that, he suggested.

This is a chance for those who'd like to compete in a car rally with a chance of winning. Bring a buck, bring a partner, and come to the dormitory parking lot on Thursday afternoon and enter Dave Dummy's Car Rally. It'll be a good time.
