

FGDP(UK) Dean calls for greater diversity

IAN MILLS, DEAN OF FGDP(UK), HAS CALLED FOR THE LEADERSHIP OF DENTAL ORGANISATIONS TO BETTER REFLECT THE DIVERSITY OF THE PROFESSION.

In an address to Faculty members and professional leaders at the FGDP(UK) Annual Dinner and Awards in March, the Dean said that dental leaders have a "moral obligation" to ensure that their organisations "support social justice through a culture and environment of inclusivity".

He described as "unacceptable" the persistence of "many barriers which intimidate and inhibit certain individuals from engaging with dental organisations", and said that the best way to change perceptions and encourage engagement was by ensuring diversity of gender, age and ethnicity within Boards at both national and local level.

Outlining the opportunity, he said diversity "modulates attitudes and behaviours, undermines 'group-think', and delivers improved performance within an organisation". He continued, "Social and professional diversity reflects the diversity within our profession, and can provide insight into the different views, attitudes and beliefs which may exist. This is a healthy environment which can stimulate discussion, debate and reflection, and in turn, provides a degree of internal accountability. We need diversity to understand the changing needs of our profession, to connect with new members and ensure that we continue to be relevant."

Giving the example of students and early careers dentists, he said that as Dean he "can try to understand the challenges they face and what they need and want from the FGDP, but in reality, it is simply my interpretation. The different groups within dentistry need to have a voice".

Dr Mills said this was "particularly true of women in dentistry". He noted that when he was elected to the Faculty Board in 2003, there was only one female board member out of 30 (3.3%), and that while this had improved to 6 out of 16 today (38%), the board remained "a male dominated environment" at a time when "there are more female undergraduates than male, and the number of women on the dental register exceeds the number of men."

Ian Mills' address at the FGDP(UK) Annual Dinner, 12 March 2020

He added that FGDP(UK) and the British Dental Association would be announcing details of a joint symposium on diversity in dental organisations, with a particular focus on gender balance, in due course.

College of General Dentistry (CGDent) launches first qualification

THE DIPLOMA IN PRIMARY CARE ORTHODONTICS IS THE LATEST DEVELOPMENT BY CGDENT.

Training for the qualification is provided by IAS Academy through its Advanced Orthodontics course. The comprehensive syllabus covers assessment, diagnosis and treatment planning, as well as provision using the complete range of orthodontic appliance systems (including but not limited to fixed functional, aligners, Inman and removable). Students also gain an understanding of the science of orthodontics, as well as the evidence and research underpinning care, and the course trains dentists in how to treat more complex malocclusions, including extraction cases.

Education is delivered both on-campus and online in five 3-4 day blocks over 14 months, and includes both hands-on and theoretical study, as well as one-to-one mentoring for 20 treated cases in preparation for the diploma examination.

Prof Nairn Wilson CBE, Chair of the College of General Dentistry, said:

"We are excited to be launching our new qualification. With its impressive breadth, scope and depth, the IAS Academy's advanced course is perfectly aligned to training in preparation for the DipPCOrth. The involvement of IAS gives us confidence that those who take the examinations will be well prepared and set for professional success."

FGDP(UK) supports oral health lessons for toddlers

The Department for Education recently consulted on proposals to include oral health within the Early Years Foundation Stage curriculum, which would make it a mandatory teaching topic in nurseries, nursery schools and primary/ infant school reception classes in England.

FGDP(UK) submitted a supportive response, highlighting that despite tooth decay being almost entirely preventable, tooth extraction remains the number one reason why children are admitted to hospital. The Faculty also argued that many children and parents are unaware of the importance of good oral health.

Whilst oral health is being added to the curriculum for primary and secondary school children from September 2020, the Faculty believes that the inclusion of oral health in the Early Years Foundation Stage curriculum would contribute to the success of oral health education at later stages.

ICO names and shames non-payers

FGDP(UK) REMINDS DENTAL PRACTICES OF THE NEED TO PAY DATA PROTECTION FEES.

The Information Commissioner's Office (ICO) has begun to contact all UK-registered companies to remind them of their legal responsibility to pay the annual fee, which ranges from £40-2,900 according to a company's size and turnover, and which all organisations processing personal information have been required to pay since May 2018.

The regulator maintains an online register of organisations which have paid the fee and names non-paying organisations. It also fines non-payers, but says the fines are likely to be reduced or waived during the coronavirus pandemic if an organisation can provide evidence that non-payment is due to financial reasons linked to the crisis, and if assurance is given of when payment will be made.

Fees can be paid at <https://ico.org.uk/fee> and dental practices can contact the ICO's small business helpline for further advice (0303 123 1113; Monday to Friday, 9am to 5pm).
