Font: The font used is Beowolf. This typeface was designed by Just van Rossum and Erik van Blokland at the end of the 80s. Originally it was a 'random font': by means of a certain algorithm, printers would automatically 'damage' each letter (differently). The objective was to imitate or reproduce the rough and irregular character of the first printed books in which no letter was the same. This resulted in type pages with a lot of relief and irregularities. With the present OpenTypeFont the letters are not distorted (reformed, transformed) during the printing process. Instead, the different variations of each letter are placed ad random during the layout, in the same way Gutenberg used different variations of the same letter to imitate handwriting.
