Positioning ourselves as a library of the future

The ARL 2030 Scenarios: A User's Guide for Research Libraries

- Engaging Fully in Research Activities as Service Provider and Steward of Content

  Across the highly divergent future research environments shared through the scenarios, research libraries will have the opportunity to provide a broad set of services to researchers throughout the research process. Those services require the library professional of the future to be a fully engaged member of the research team with responsibility to create, describe, curate, control access, and authenticate information.

Welcome
Welcome to Sakai, Providence College's new learning management system. A pilot program in using Sakai is being offered by a handful of faculty who are offering their course materials in the system. Feedback from students and faculty on the system will be actively sought during the semester. If you have questions about PC's use of Sakai, contact sakaihelp@providence.edu

2020, Section 3: Students

a. College Learning for the New Global Century
Association of American Colleges and Universities, 2007

"In recent years, the ground has shifted for Americans in virtually every important sphere of life—economic, global, cross-cultural, environmental, civic. The world is being dramatically reshaped by scientific and technological innovations, global interdependence, cross-cultural encounters, and changes in the balance of economic and political power.

These waves of dislocating change will only intensify. The context in which today's students will make choices and compose lives is one of disruption rather than certainty, and of interdependence rather than insularity. This volatility also applies to careers. Studies show that Americans already change jobs ten times in the two decades after they turn eighteen, with such change even more frequent for younger workers."

b. Horizon Report 2011
The New Media Consortium and the EDUCAUSE Learning Initiative, 2011.

"People expect to be able to work, learn, and study whenever and wherever they want.
This highly-ranked trend, also noted last year, continues to permeate all aspects of daily life. Mobiles contribute to this trend, where increased availability of the Internet feeds the expectation of access. Feelings of frustration are common when it is not available. Companies are starting to respond to consumer demand for access anywhere; in 2010, programs like Google's Fiber for Communities sought to expand access to underserved communities, and several airlines began offering wireless network access in the air during flights.

Smart cities get their own operating system
Katia Moskvitch
BBC News, September 30, 2011
"Cities could soon be looking after their citizens all by themselves thanks to an operating system designed for the metropolis.
The Urban OS works just like a PC operating system but keeps buildings, traffic and services running smoothly.
The software takes in data from sensors dotted around the city to keep an eye on what is happening.

Smart cities get their own operating system

Katia Moskvitch

BBC News, September 30, 2011

"Cities could soon be looking after their citizens all by themselves thanks to an operating system designed for the metropolis.

The Urban OS works just like a PC operating system but keeps buildings, traffic

[Stormy Waters Ahead as 'Disruptive Forces' Sweep the Old Guard]

"Graduation rates in the US have fallen, and states have slashed funding for higher education. As a result, public universities have raised tuition fees, and many are struggling to stay afloat during the recession. But two authors working in the US higher education sector claim that the academy has a bigger battle on the horizon: the "disruptive innovation" ushered in by online education."

Thank you!
