

THE PROSE POEM: AN INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL

Volume 1 | 1992

The Bee Man Jane Blue

© Providence College

The author(s) permits users to copy, distribute, display, and perform this work under the following conditions: (1) the original author(s) must be given proper attribution; (2) this work may not be used for commercial purposes; (3) the users may not alter, transform, or build upon this work; (4) users must make the license terms of this work clearly known for any reuse or distribution of this work. Upon request, as holder of this work's copyright, the author(s) may waive any or all of these conditions.

The Prose Poem: An International Journal is produced by The Berkeley Electronic Press (bepress)
for the Providence College Digital Commons.
<http://digitalcommons.providence.edu/prosepoems/>

Jane Blue

THE BEE MAN

He loves bees, studies them, plays the clarinet for them from the stage of a county fair. He is clothed with bees, which also clothe the clarinet, becoming a cover like brushed cloth to wrap silver. But the music doesn't stop under the cover, just takes on the tones of honey, thick and sweet, and when the man clutches a microphone, bees layer it like foam, furry and nubbed, adding timbre, a rich vibrato, the very air of his breath caressed by bees. He is not a beekeeper but an entomologist, bee hero, defender of the inarticulate and maligned bees whose tongues if they have tongues do not form words to explain what makes them sting. They want to say it is fear: Simply have no fear and we will not pierce your skin to plant our poison. Do not even inadvertently mime fear or we'll interpret the vibrations of your gasping, reverberation of shallow inhaled breath against the sounding board of your clavicle, as a call to war. And then this man reveals he is one of those with a fatal allergy to the sting of a bee. His secret is that he himself has no fear, and he loves his enemy.