Greetings, and welcome to the fourth issue of Clinical Research in Practice: The Journal of Team Hippocrates. Our last issue was abundantly successful, with several articles among the most popular papers published to date in CRP. Furthermore, the number of submissions to the Journal continues to expand, as well as downloads both within the United States and internationally.

This growth would not be possible without the hard work of our authors, peer reviewers, and editorial board. As we transition to a new academic year, we would like to express our sincerest gratitude to all of our graduating seniors. A special recognition must also be extended to our graduating Student Senior Editors: Tim Caldwell and John Dawdy. The Journal would not be where it is today without your countless hours and energy spent. For this, we are incredibly grateful.

Moreover, on behalf of the entire editorial board, we would like to introduce our new team of Senior Student Editors: Thomas Bolig, William Kane, and Mitchell Kentor. All are in their final year at Wayne State University School of Medicine. Thomas earned a B.S. from University of Michigan and an M.S. from Loyola University Chicago, and William & Mitchell both received B.B.A.s from the Ross School of Business at the University of Michigan.

We are excited for the opportunity to contribute, and hope to further The Journal's mission of integrating evidence-based medicine into clinical practice, while simultaneously providing medical students an opportunity to both create and review articles relating to their unique clinical experience. We at the Journal believe that now more than ever, medical students must be able to analyze and assess increasingly complex research and data. Even more importantly, they must learn to utilize this data in a clinical manner to make the best possible decisions for their patients. The Journal aims to help prepare medical students for the changing and increasingly data-heavy world of modern medicine.

Our goals for the upcoming year include continued growth of the Journal, in both number of submissions and publications, as well as in the Journal's reach both locally and abroad. To do this, we encourage authors to continue submitting Letters to the Editor, with a focus on the student experience and medical education.

With these goals in mind, we look forward to the year ahead and hope to serve our readers well.

Sincerely,

Thomas Bolig, William Kane & Mitchell Kentor
