Tuition increase

Fees raised for fifth consecutive year

By Kathleen Smith
Of The Archway Staff

For the fifth consecutive year, the Bryant College Board of Trustees has decided to raise the cost of going to Bryant College. Students received official notices in their mailboxes from Alton Mott, Vice President for Business Affairs, informing them of the decision to increase tuition, room and board.

Matriculating students during the 1983-84 academic year will have to pay $4,175 for tuition, $425 more than the present year. Since 1976, tuition has increased more than 80%. This year's increase, is the largest single increase in tuition since 1976.

The reason given for the increase over last year is "to provide a quality educational experience and to provide the facilities and resources to accommodate these academic needs."

The Board of Trustees also approved a new addition to the Unistructure, although no comment has been made as to whether these two decisions are related.

In the letter sent to students, Mr. Mott said the Board also agreed to a "significant increase" in the institutional student aid budget.

The exact amount of this "significant increase" has not been disclosed by the Financial Aid Office.

For a student living in the Dormitory Village, room and board have increased by 4.3% over last year. This is the smallest increase since 1979. Since 1976, room and board have increased $1,520, more than 50%.

There is an average increase of 11.44% in tuition, room and board over the past four years. Mr. Mott points out that the tuition fee for one year at Bryant is less than that of Bryant's competitors.

While the cost of living in the Dormitory Village has increased $125 from the $1,390 of this year, incoming freshmen will have to pay $1,715, $175 more than this year. A more significant increase is seen in the cost of townhouse living. Townhouse residents next year will pay $270 more for either a single or double occupancy than students living there this year. These charges do not include a meal plan.

Dining Service fees have increased $115 for the $19 Meal Plan, which now costs $1,355. According to the Bursar's Office, students on the 12 Meal Plan will have to pay $1,305 and $1,285 for the 9 Meal Plan.

Costs through the years

Building expansion

Addition to Unistructure allows more room for school

By Toni Rackliffe
Of The Archway Staff

An addition of 45,000 square feet is being added to the Unistructure, according to Brian Britton, Director of Physical Plant.

Housed within this addition are to be administrative and faculty offices, conference rooms, a lecture hall and most important, the greatly needed additional volume and reader areas in the library.

The extra library space is the basis for the addition, according to Britton. "Numerous complaints have been made concerning the limited library space," explains Britton, "Many people feel it's too small to serve entire Bryant community effectively."

The increase will allow for 415 seats and 70,000 volumes, boosting the totals to 900 and 160,000 respectively.

The administrative offices to be built will be the newly established Small Business Center, Graduate School, Center for Management Development (CMD), Evening Division, Institutional Advancement and eight classrooms.

The CMD office will also contain conference rooms, one large enough to seat 300 people. This should lighten the crunch for meeting space.

Construction will begin in late spring says Britton and will hopefully be finished by July 1984.

The cost of the addition is still being determined according to Britton.

Liberal Arts requirements to give structure to selection

By Diana Douglass
Of The Archway Staff

As stated by the Dean of Undergraduate Faculty, Stanley Kozikowski, the liberal arts requirements at Bryant have been revised. Liberal arts can be defined as the studies of science, math, and the humanities. Each student will still be required to take 36 hours of liberal arts courses, however the hours have been "redesignated in order to provide more specifically for the humanities." The humanities are considered to be such studies as art, music, history, languages, literature, philosophy, and religious studies.

Taking effect next September, the new requirements will begin with the class of 1986 (this year's freshmen). The new distribution is as follows:

Humanities: English (3 credits), History (3 credits), Humanities Electives (9 credits)
Math and Natural Sciences: Math (3 credits), Natural Sciences (6 credits)
Social Sciences (9 credits)
Liberal Arts Electives (3 credits)

According to Kozikowski, departmental course requirements will not be affected by the change.

"The concern was that the liberal arts free election structure has a tendency to encourage a lack of cohesion and purpose in a student's selection of courses." The new requirements will "give order, purpose, and direction to a student's selection of liberal arts."

There has also been a proposal that seniors be required to take at least 2 advanced (300/400 level) courses. At the moment there is no formal distinction between courses, so the Curriculum Committee is considering whether a definition of each level should be formulated. If it is, the definitions of the advanced level courses will be on the idea that 400 level courses entail research on a specialized topic and 300 level courses are an advanced level survey which stresses interpretation and analysis.

The goal behind the redistribution of liberal arts requirements is to attain "a more unified and coherent program in liberal arts, sensitive to the role of the humanities", according to Kozikowski.

Expansion of the Unistructure will include additional area for library users.

The lighter side of serious...

Got a quarter for a game of pinball?

By Roberta Jaroska
Of The Archway Staff

Let's face it. Everyone, no matter who they are, shows some sign of compulsive behavior at least once in their lifetime. For others, however, this behavior becomes a way of life - a habit - a so-called "third arm".

For example, consider the person who tried ketchup with his mashed potatoes once on a dare, and now carries a bottle wherever he goes, or the person who can't function until all the pencils on his desk are sharpened and pointing in the same direction. Okay, I'll admit these compulsive behaviors aren't that earth-shattering and most people do lead normal lives without letting them interfere in their daily routines.

However, consider for a moment, if you will, the major compulsive behavior in America today - one which affects people of all ages - draining them of their physical and emotional strength as well as their hard earned cash. Oh come on, I know you know it - that's right - VIDEO GAMES!

Yes, those four-foot technological wonders that swallow your quarters and then beat you nine times out of ten have grabbed Americans by the arm and aren't letting go.

Truth or Dare - are you now, or have you ever been a "Videoholic"? If you dare, I challenge you to a game, of Pac-Man to test your skill. (No videoholic can throw a game never mind pass one up, it's in their blood)

Think I'm exaggerating? Well, for all you non-believers who say "What's the big deal anyway? It's only a game, no one's forcing them to play" - do what I do. Spend an afternoon in the gameroom watching these "masters of the small screen" match wits with their computerized opponents. Guaranteed you won't think of them as "just games" when you leave. This is serious business, a way of life which can be hazardous to your health.

"Videoholics" often suffer such physical ailments as eye strain, elevated blood pressure, neck and arm cramps, blisters, and nervous twitches. Emotionally, players experience frustration, depression, hostility, jealousy, and a loss of self-respect - sometimes all in the course of a single game. This "emotional torture" is often compounded by the dread of knowing they are financially tapped dry and must call home for more money, or dip into the savings account they swore was reserved for a rainy day.

How do I know all the symptoms? From experience. Yes, I am a reformed videoholic.

With March comes the increase.

You can set your watch by it; every March the fees associated with attending Bryant College rise.

This year, the tuition and room and board costs rose again, and at the third highest rate since 1975. The tuition increase of $425 is the highest increase since 1975. The cheapest a student can get off with is $6975, assuming the student lives in the Dormitory Village ($1,515), eats nine meals per week ($1,285 - according to the estimates from the Bursar's Office) and takes a full course load ($4,175).

Add to those figures transportation, books, and personal expenses and the cost will easily exceed $8,000.

The letter from Alton Mott, Vice-President for Student Affairs, informing parents and students of the increases stated, "Our new rates are considerably lower than those private colleges that compete with Bryant." A very comforting thought as one shells out almost $620 per year in cost increases, an 11.44 percent increase on the average over the last four years.

To the college's credit, however, the letter also stated, "the Board of Trustees has also approved a significant increase in our institutional student aid budget for the next year and the years to follow." As to how substantial the increase is, Financial Aid Officials were unavailable for comment at presstime. The bottom line on the financial aid packages to go out later this semester will indicate just how concerned the Trustees are with keeping students at Bryant.

Is Bryant trying to catch up with its competitors? Does the cost of attending an institution reflect the quality of education? Has the cost of the recent contract settlement with the maintenance workers, the impending settlement with the faculty, and the planned building addition to the school been pawned off on the students? Are the increases justified?

While Bryant may be lower in costs than its competitors, Bentley and Babson, for example, isn't it more expensive to live in Waltham or Wellesley Massachusetts than North Smithfield, Rhode Island?

There is one solution to the increases: live as cheaply as possible, eat infrequently, and pray for financial aid.

Magic Kingdom Program gives view of a corporation aimed at providing fun

By Susan Fuller
Of The Archway Staff

Four hundred college students across the country did it last summer! Two hundred students did it last fall! What did they do? They headed south to get a first-hand view of a corporation that has been entertaining millions of people for years. Where did they go? Let me give you a hint: M-I-C-K-E-Y M-O-U-S-E! With the aid of the Magic Kingdom College Program, college students across the country are given the opportunity to spend a semester working at Walt Disney World in Florida, and get college credits for doing so.

The Magic Kingdom College Program (MKCP) started nationwide in the summer of 1981, with 44 colleges and 250 students majoring in retailing, recreation, marketing, management and food and hospitality. The program now includes 88 colleges throughout the country, one being Bryant, which entered the program in January of 1982. This was Bryant's first full-semester off-campus internship for which students were enrolled in the program. They include Gail Harden, David Bonola, Joseph Fischer, Richard Kragle, Marcia Miller, Sandra Alemian, Sandra Spencer and Julianna Law.

The Process

Students must go through a selection procedure to become a "Disney intern". First, Bryant requires internship participants be currently second semester sophomores through second semester juniors. Dean Stanley Kozikowski and each department Chairman decides whether the student has the appropriate grade point average, which is around a 2.83, and sufficient course work completed. Each department chairman also determines the number of academic credits to be granted to each intern, ranging from three to nine, depending on the student's major.

During the fall and spring semesters, personnel from the College Relations Department at Walt Disney World come to Bryant and interview students who have been given eligibility for internship credit. A representative will be on campus this coming April 6 at 12:00 to begin interviews for next fall's internship.

Once Disney World has chosen a student to participate in the program, the selection process is not finished. The student must have an interview with the department chairman of his given major. The student is given certain projects and assignments (depending upon the number of credits allocated for the internship) to be completed during the semester at Disney World. These projects range from weekly or bi-weekly journals to midterms and finals.

Professor Ronald DeLuga, who supervised interns from the management department, required students to do such assignments as researching Disney's long term plans and the history of Disney's past projects. Sometimes the students are required to interview members of Disney management as part of their projects.

Working for Disney

Once a student has satisfied all of the necessary requirements and has officially become a member of the Magic Kingdom College Program, he heads south to begin his experience. Disney assigns each intern to various jobs based upon their major. The jobs are grouped into the four major operating areas, food, merchandise, attractions and custodial.

The jobs range from being a skipper of one of the river launches of the Jungle Cruise to being a ticket collector to being a food and beverage host at the Contemporary Resort, which was what Joe Fischer, a Hotel and management major, did last semester.

According to Joe, one of the best jobs a student can get is to be a host at the Resort Hotel, which has served such famous people as Richard Nixon. He also stated the worst possible job is being in charge of collecting and arranging the baby strollers which some "poor" recreation majors were assigned to.

A training program, consisting of two phases, is provided for the students. The first phase, "Tradition 1" as it is called, is simply an overall introduction to the company. "Tradition 2" is individual training at each designated job. Part of the "Disney way" in training students, is to refer to them not as employees, but as "cast members." One does not wear a uniform, but a "costume", and customers are not served, but "guests" are. All "cast members" must be neat, clean and friendly and always smile. Disney is strict on such policies. Each intern is guaranteed thirty hours a week with two consecutive days off and makes approximately $3.70 per hour.

Disney tells the students that this is not a money-making opportunity, but is an educational experience. Joe stated that "you get out of the work experience what you put into it."

If the student is not happy with his particular job, he may push to move his job, yet according to Joe, this is often difficult.

Working is not the only task required of the interns during their stay at Walt Disney World. An important part of the MKCP is the twelve-week classroom experience in the Leisure Time Business Management Studies, which is a prerequisite for completing the program. The seminars run between two to three times a week and are taught by a member of Disney Management, and focus on each area of Disney operation. Seminar topics include Finance, food administration, future plans, operations, career planning and more. Joe Fischer explained that one seminar even explained the development of Mickey Mouse; and how to draw the character. At the completion of the program, each student is given a diploma for attending the seminars.

Florida Living

Even with working and attending seminars, the students do find time to enjoy the wonders of Florida's attractions, beaches and nightlife. The interns stay at Snow White Campground, just outside of Walt Disney World in trailers. They are placed eight to a trailer and are purposely not put with students from their own college so they can benefit by forming relationships with people from other parts of the country.

The trailers have four bedrooms, two bathrooms and a kitchen, which Joe says was a bit uncomfortable at times, especially when they were forced to eat in shifts, for the kitchen table only sat four. The students are charged $160 a month rent, $40 a week being taken out of the pay checks.

A van service which runs from the camp to Disney is provided, yet Joe explained that it was often unreliable and car pools were frequently used, arranged by Disney's own Cast Activities Department. The Department organizes many benefits to the cast members, among them a credit union, health insurance, discounts on attractions, and various clubs, such as a sky-diving and a scuba club.

John Kempf and John Martin present Dale Fulcher with a check for $300. The money was raised during the February 23 Wine & Cheese sponsored by Phi Sigma Nu for the Northern Rhode Island Special Olympics.
