2012 Alumni Achievement Award recipients

Four alumni and a long-time faculty member received honors for their varied contributions.

Bryant National Alumni Council members, students, faculty, and staff on the Alumni Achievement Awards Selection Committee face a difficult task each year. They must decide who, among the dozens of nominated, qualified alumni, should receive an Alumni Achievement Award.

"We think it's important that each constituent of the Bryant community is represented in the committee," says Robin Torbron Warde, director of Alumni Relations. "Nominees' successes and contributions are seen in different ways by these different populations. Success is defined differently by everybody, but there's no doubt all these alumni deserve to be recognized."

This year's Alumni Achievement Awards recipients are:

DISTINGUISHED ALUMNUS AWARD

When Thomas F. Hewitt '68 (Washington, D.C.) was in high school, he dreamed of one day running a large company. "I always thought that I wanted to enter the business world," says Tom, "and my years at Bryant confirmed it. Once there, I also gained the tools, knowledge, and confidence to begin my journey." Since graduating, Tom took what was once a medium-sized, domestic company and grew it to the largest global management company in the world. Now chair of the board of Interstate Hotels and Resorts, Tom remains active in the company while pursuing personal investment projects. He also has served on Bryant's Board of Trustees and chaired the University's National Council on Philanthropy. "When recognition for your achievements comes from a highly regarded institution, especially from your alma mater, it is very special."

DISTINGUISHED ALUMNUS AWARD – GRADUATE SCHOOL

What Philip R. Graham '88 MBA (Mansfield, MA), senior vice president of corporate tax at Fidelity Investments, finds most satisfying about his career may surprise you.

Though his impressive résumé highlights his work on a number of interesting and challenging projects, Philip's point of pride is his relationship-building skill. "I am most proud of seeing the success of people whom I have mentored," he says, "and watching them go on to mentor others." Helping others advance their careers is just one example of Philip's outstanding record assisting those who may benefit from his knowledge. "Success, to me, is being able to balance work you enjoy with time and energy spent with family, friends, and in service to others." In addition to participating on career panels and attending alumni events, Philip recently endowed a scholarship at the University.

NELSON J. GULSKI SERVICE AWARD

H. James Magee '88 (Bridgewater, MA) is "honored to be acknowledged for doing something I enjoy." This year's Nelson Gulski Award recipient, Jim has long been proud of, and committed to, his alma mater. There are few events on or around campus at which you won't see him, his wife, Meg (Mitchell) '89, and their two children. Jim is the immediate past president of the National Alumni Council, the governing arm of the Alumni Association. "I believe it's important to reconnect alumni who have lost touch with Bryant and also to build a connection between students and alumni," Jim, who has mentored dozens of students, says. "Alumni reaching out to students shows the esteem we hold for our Bryant education and the value of the alumni network."

YOUNG ALUMNUS LEADERSHIP AWARD

Stephen L. Tully, Jr. '98 (Chatham, NJ), institutional client service, Cantillon Capital Management, is the Young Alumnus Leadership Award recipient.

Stephen was instrumental in establishing Bryant's football program and coached women's lacrosse and football as a graduate assistant. Since then, he participates regularly in alumni/student networking events and mentors students seeking careers on Wall Street. "Bryant gave me the confidence and support every young person needs," he says. "I had a wonderful experience at Bryant, and I look forward to paying this gift back by helping others get the most out of their own Bryant experience." In addition to his networking with and mentoring students, Stephen and his wife established an endowed scholarship at Bryant to benefit a football athlete as another way to give back to his alma mater.

DISTINGUISHED FACULTY AWARD

Elizabeth "Betty" Yobaccio, DBA, professor and chair of the finance department, a 20-year member of Bryant's faculty, receives the Distinguished Faculty Award in recognition of her devotion to the teaching profession and her personal concern for and commitment to students. "There are many awards possible at Bryant," she says, "but none is more meaningful to me than the Distinguished Faculty Award. It's gratifying to learn that alumni remember and appreciate my effort to make a difference in their lives when they were students." Betty has been a key member in helping to design, develop, coordinate, and deliver the International Business program at Bryant. "Bryant's IB program meets or exceeds the best practices of top-notch IB programs around the country," she says. "I'm very grateful for having the opportunity to be involved."

WHAT'S NEW

Master of Science in Global Environmental Studies

Climate change. Dwindling energy resources. Toxic waste production. Not only do these affect nature, they can also impact the world economy.

Bryant's new Master of Science in Global Environmental Studies is intended for graduate students interested in careers in environmental management, policy making, green building technologies, land use assessment, and more.

The program features a high degree of flexibility for selecting courses that best fit a student's career plans, an emphasis on research and publication, and collaboration with the China University of Geosciences at Wuhan, including study abroad opportunities. The MS in Global Environmental Studies may be completed on its own or as an integrated, five-year undergraduate-graduate combined course of study.

Center for Global and Regional Economic Studies

Bryant has launched The Rhode Island Center for Global and Regional Economic Studies (www.bryant.edu/ces), which showcases the expertise of the University's faculty. The center contributes to the development of global and regional economic perspectives in graduate and undergraduate students through interdisciplinary applied research, internships, international and regional outreach, and conferences and workshops.

The center works in partnership with global and regional organizations such as The New England Economic Partnership to provide objective economic forecasts; The Rhode Island Public Expenditure Council, a nonpartisan public policy organization that produces a quarterly publication of national, regional, and state economic conditions; and The United States Agency for International Development Community Connections Program, an innovative training program for experienced professionals from the Newly Independent States of the former Soviet Union, also known as the Commonwealth of Independent States.

CATCHING UP WITH...

Steven Rogé '03
Portfolio manager, R.W. Rogé & Co.
Co-Founder and president, the Rogé Partners Fund

Steven Rogé '03 (Rowley, MA) was drawn to the stock ticker at a young age, and it's one of the tools he uses as a co-founder and president of his mutual fund, the Rogé Partners Fund.

"I knew I wanted to be a mutual fund manager at the age of 14 when I deconstructed an Oakmark Funds annual report," he says. "I feel like it was yesterday when I had an epiphany: mutual fund managers actually got paid to pick stocks!"

Steven's fascination with picking stocks eventually led him to enroll in Bryant, pursuing a dual concentration in finance and economics. More than laying the foundation for his career, Bryant helped him on a more personal level as well – it's where he met his wife, Susan (Chesley) Rogé '03.

Steven had worked summers and vacations at R.W. Rogé & Co. He now serves as its portfolio manager, conducting extensive hands-on research and analysis of securities at the wealth management firm, which oversees $200 million.

Steven shares his passion for investing with Bryant students who are part of The Archway Investment Fund, a set of two undergraduate courses that manages a portfolio of $600,000 of University money. He has been on the advisory board since the fund's inception in 2005.

"Over that time, Steven has mentored students, disseminated job leads, arranged guest speakers, served as a guest speaker himself, and contributed funding to support special events," says David Louton, Ph.D., faculty adviser to fund students. "His commitment to help us bring the real world of business into the classroom, and to help students make the transition from the classroom to the world of business, is exactly what we need from interested alumni."

Steven is a sought-after expert for financial analysis opinions in Smartmoney.com and The New York Times, and on CNBC and Fox; he's also a contributing editor for Forbes.com, SeekingAlpha.com, and Morningstar.com.

Jessica David '10 MBA
Vice President for Strategy, Planning and Special Projects
Rhode Island Foundation

As vice president for strategy, planning and special projects at The Rhode Island Foundation, one of the oldest and largest community foundations in the country, Jessica David '10 MBA finds her job changes a lot – and she loves it.

"At The Rhode Island Foundation, we don't just administer grants when requested," she says. "We proactively seek to identify issues that are affecting Rhode Island, or could in the future – from affordable housing to accessible health care, and everything in between – and try to direct the appropriate resources toward addressing those concerns."

Jessica couldn't think of a more fulfilling career choice, as this is a community she holds dear. Originally from Seekonk, she went to Washington, D.C., to pursue an undergraduate degree in political science from American University.

"My plan was to stay in D.C. after graduating because it's such fertile ground for the field of political science," she says. "But my heart is in Rhode Island."

That's not to say Jessica is averse to stepping out of her comfort zone. After all, she decided to take her non-profit, liberal arts focused background and shake things up by pursuing a Master's degree in Business Administration.

"I felt it would stretch me, personally and professionally," she says. "It turned out to be one of the best decisions I've ever made. Bryant's cohort and group teaching models added to our growth, and I still get together with my team every month or so."

Now Jessica uses her MBA to help her plan and strategize for her organization. "There are so many great things on the horizon for the Foundation," she says. "We are at the intersection of the non-profit, government, and corporate worlds. I have the opportunity to work with amazing people who have great vision and passion for making Rhode Island better. It's very rewarding."

Sam Mirmirani, Ph.D.
Professor of Economics, Bryant University

If you attended Bryant after 1981, you might recognize Sam Mirmirani, Ph.D.

For the last 30 years, he's been educating thousands of people on the interdisciplinary subject of economics.

"Economics is complex, especially for first-year students," says Sam. "It's a field that includes a number of different branches of knowledge, such as psychology, history, math, sociology, and business."

Though he began studying economic development and public finance, Sam's interest in the economics of health care emerged in 1980, during the second year of his Ph.D. program at Clark University. He took part in a research project to examine the economic impact of hospital industry regulation in Massachusetts. What he found in regard to their record-keeping systems, he says, hasn't changed a lot over the years since.

"The health care industry in the United States is so disjointed, so behind in information gathering and sharing systems," he says. "Back when I was first studying the system, the hospitals and health care providers had large rooms to store the boxes upon boxes of information."

That image – and the interest that was borne from what he discovered in graduate school – stayed with Sam through the years. Since then, he has been a leading voice on the United States health care crisis. He has written many refereed journal articles, some in collaboration with colleagues, about the economics of health care and health care reform. At the invitation of Rhode Island Lieutenant Governor Elizabeth Roberts, he also served on a health care reform advisory group in the state.

All of this field work in his areas of interest allows him to relate coursework to real-world examples for his students. "My teaching style has changed over the years," says Sam. "Now, I often ask controversial questions to get them engaged and encourage critical thinking. When I see students learn something from me, especially students in their junior and senior years who come to appreciate their foundation in the freshman classes, I find it enriching and rewarding."

The numbers add up: Robert Iadeluca '58

Alumnus spends more than 50 years (and counting) in a successful and fulfilling career working for himself.

Robert “Bob” Iadeluca ‘58 (East Greenwich, RI) never shied away from taking charge of his life and career.

Back in Cranston, RI, where he grew up, he designed his own high school curriculum, enrolling in bookkeeping and college business classes to gain a better understanding of these areas of interest. “It wasn’t a given that I would attend college,” he says. “My father had passed away when I was ten years old, and all six of us children and my mother worked to maintain the household.”

But Bob knew what he wanted – a college business education – and he kept his eyes on the prize. Bryant College in Providence, RI, offered the education he was looking for, and so he worked hard, close to 40 hours a week, to pay his tuition and fulfill his obligations to his family while studying and keeping up his grades.

“Everything about Bryant was good for me,” says Bob. “Professors like John Renza, Henry Lee, and Dean Nelson Gulski profoundly affected me. They knew my situation, and they cared. They helped me out by finding students for me to tutor to earn some money.”

AN ENTREPRENEURIAL SPIRIT

After graduating from Bryant, Bob began working immediately in the field of accounting, his major. He spent more than a decade employed at a couple of different CPA firms until he decided to strike out on his own, a decision that his mother couldn’t understand. “She thought I was crazy,” Bob says with a chuckle. “I was leaving the security of an established firm for the uncertainty of opening my own practice – something people who lived through the Great Depression feared.”

Bob was pleased to prove to his mother that he had chosen wisely when his own business brought in a higher income than he made at the larger firm in the first year. Even with devoting the time new business owners must commit to their ventures to ensure success, Bob managed to stay active in his professional organization, the Rhode Island Association of Public Accountants (RIAPA), which is open to accountants of all designations.

“You don’t hear the term ‘public accountant’ much anymore,” he says. “Many states, including Rhode Island, changed the laws that affect what an accountant can, or cannot, do. Licensing is very specific and governed closely in the field. These days, a Certified Public Accountant needs to have a Master’s degree as part of the requirement.”

EVERYTHING ADDS UP

Although there are fewer than 20 Public Accountants in the state, the RIAPA, for which Bob serves as executive director, boasts a membership of more than 150. The reasons for the significant membership numbers come down to simple math, Bob says. “We offer great seminars and professional networking opportunities to our members and the fees are quite reasonable.”

In his RIAPA role, Bob encouraged the organization to endow a scholarship for Bryant accounting students. In fall 2013, the Rhode Island Association of Public Accountants Endowed Scholarship Fund will begin providing financial assistance to a Bryant student with proven financial need, with preference going to a native Rhode Island senior accounting major.

To ensure a student would benefit from a scholarship a bit sooner, the Robert ‘58 and Nancy Iadeluca Partners-

Bob Iadeluca ‘58, business owner and executive director of the Rhode Island Association of Public Accountants.

In-Scholarship will award a senior accounting major $2,500 in fall 2012. “Nancy and I could not be more pleased to help an accounting student at Bryant University who is in the same situation I was so many years ago,” says Bob.

Now financially secure, Bob, like most entrepreneurs, can’t imagine himself retired and fully out of the game. “I enjoy what I do,” he says. “I meet with people and help them get their finances in order. It’s very fulfilling.”

BRYANT HAS HISTORY

In the early 1960s preparing to seek accreditation, Bryant ramped up its liberal arts course offerings. In 1962, the biology lab consisted of a single wet laboratory work station.

Today, the 8,300-square-foot science complex features two large wet labs, each able to accommodate 24 students, and an advanced wet laboratory, for up to 16 students, plus six individualized research labs.

In 1961, Bryant President Gardner Jacobs purchased a mansion at 128 Hope Street on the East Side of Providence and converted it to the Henry L. Jacobs library. In the ‘60s, research classes were conducted in the library, introducing students to its holdings and resources.

The 62,000-square-foot Douglas ‘69 and Judith Krupp Library was built to accommodate today’s group- or cohort-oriented learning model. Today’s library has 446 seats and nearly five miles of shelves.

The Hartford and Target sponsor student competitions

Three teams of Bryant students recently threw their hats in the ring to compete in The Hartford’s annual Campus Case Competition. Each team was assigned a mentor, a recent Bryant alumnus/a, who provided advice as well as additional information regarding the financial services industry, if appropriate. Mentors were Nicole Archambault ’10, Joe Buckley ’11, Tom Carroll ’11, and Matt Moore ’09.

The teams of three to five students acted as consultants charged with researching, analyzing, and recommending a mobile technology solution based on data provided.

On March 5, the three teams presented their solutions to a panel of Hartford senior management. The winning team (Emily Carow, Tim Drecshler Martell, Adrianna Lublin, Alexa McIsaac, and Haley Onofrio, all members of the Class of 2013), mentored by Tom Carroll, was awarded $1,000 and was invited to The Hartford’s campus on March 30. They will compete against winning teams from other universities involved in the competition, Bentley, Boston University, and University of Connecticut. Each team will present in front of senior company executives and the winning team will receive an additional $1,000.

EARLY HANDS-ON EXPERIENCE

Bryant alumni from a variety of companies help students get real experience early on in their college careers.

For the first time this year, Target, in addition to the case competitions the company sponsors each semester for Bryant seniors, offered prize money for a freshman Ad Competition. Along with awarding first and second place, Target gave money for the “crowd favorite,” which was determined through the results of a texting poll. Eleven Bryant alumni, who are one to two years out of college and now Target executives, mentored the competing student teams.

Dave Greenan ’73, ’04 MBA, Bryant University lecturer in the management department and key organizer to the event says, “Instructors teaching our current (and future) Bryant freshman students can’t thank the Target Corporation and our young alumni Target executives enough for helping to bring real world experiences into our classrooms.”

Scott Lafond ’82, regional human resource manager for Target, served as a judge and offered words of encouragement in his closing remarks.

(L-R) Joe Buckley ’11, Nicole Archambault ’10, Matt Moore ’09, and Tom Carroll ’11, all employees of The Hartford, volunteered to serve as mentors to teams of Bryant students in The Hartford’s annual Campus Case Competition.

Sponsor the President's Cup Golf Tournament

The Ninth Annual President's Cup Golf Tournament is in the planning stages. A day of golf at the Newport Country Club on June 25, 2012, and silent and live auctions will raise money for student scholarships.

Last year, $115,000 was raised, and organizers are hoping to top that total through sponsorship opportunities. To become a sponsor, contact John Garcia '02, University Advancement, at (401) 232-6557 or jgarcia@bryant.edu.

Let's ride!

Spring will be here before you know it, and motorcyclists throughout the region are anxiously awaiting the warmer weather to get out "in the wind." The Third Annual Bryant Alumni Motorcycle Run followed by a social gathering with food and drink is in the works. Save the date of Sunday, June 24, 2012.

Our numbers are growing each year. If you're interested in attending or if you'd like to help organize, call or e-mail Tina Senecal at (401) 232-6820 or csenecal@bryant.edu.
