BRYANT REVIEW

Commencement '97

PRESIDENT'S PERSPECTIVE

As I presided over the 1997 Bryant College commencement this May, I felt a tremendous surge of pride. The members of the class of 1997 – the first graduating class of my presidency – are well educated, highly accomplished and destined for professional and personal success. I am honored to have worked with them and with the dedicated faculty who have taught and mentored them these past four years. I am confident that the education they received at Bryant, with its dual focus on liberal arts and business skills, will serve them well.

This has been an important year for Bryant College, as well as for its graduates. Applications for admission are at a four-year high, and alumni giving is up 70 percent. Both these figures reflect renewed confidence in the College and trust in the value of the education we provide. They confirm that our newly articulated vision for Bryant as a student-centered, academically excellent college is the right vision.

Bryant has excelled by many measures this year. Our academic stars include Paulo Medeiros, a professor of literature, who became Bryant's fourth Fulbright this year and is profiled in this issue. On the administrative side, the trustees recently accepted a bold new strategic plan – The New-Century Plan for Excellence – that will ensure Bryant's academic distinction in the coming decades. You will read much more about this dynamic plan in the near future.

The graduates of 1997 are beginning an important new phase of their lives. So, too, is their alma mater. With skill and perseverance, I believe we will all achieve our highest goals.

Sincerely,

TICKER TAPE

Diana Beaudoin, interim vice president of academic affairs, had a book review published in the Fall/Winter 1997 issue of the New England Resource Center for Higher Education (NERCHE) Newsletter, University of Massachusetts-Boston. Its title is "Promotion and Tenure: Community and Socialization in Academe."

Professor Judy Barrett Litoff has published "Southern Women in a World at War" in Remaking Dixie: The Impact of World War II on the American South, ed. Neil R. McMillan (Jackson: University Press of Mississippi, 1997).

Professor Paulo de Medeiros will give a lecture titled "Haunting the Nation: Narrative, Nation, and the Contemporary Portuguese Novel" at the International Comparative Literature Association Conference at Leiden (Netherlands) in August 1997. He has also been named co-editor of a new academic publication, Cultural Inquiry: A Portuguese Studies Journal. The first issue is expected in Spring 1998.

Professor Joseph Urgo has had an essay titled "Capitalism, Nationalism, and the American Short Story" accepted for publication in Studies in Short Fiction. He also delivered a paper titled "Reading Past Tolerance: Faulknerian Encounters" at the 1997 American Literature Conference in Baltimore in May. He has recently been nominated as a fellow in the Society for Values in Higher Education.

Professor Terri Hasseler delivered a paper titled "Mr. Punch's Crinoline Anxiety: The Rhetoric of Dress and the Indian Rebellion" at the Northeast Victorian Studies Association Conference in April. She will also appear at a conference titled "From Borderlands to Borderlands: Intersections of Feminism and Rhetoric," where she will speak on "Socially Responsible Rage: Post-Colonial Feminism and Writing."

ALUMNI GIVING UP 70%

Alumni giving to Bryant soared to new heights this year, with an outstanding 70 percent increase over the same period last year. The average alumni gift increased 48 percent, from $77 to $114, and the number of donors increased 15 percent, from 3,669 to 4,219 as of April 30.

"There is a renewed sense of excitement and purpose on campus, and alumni are responding to that," says Laurie L. Musgrove, vice president for institutional advancement. With a new college president, a very active board of trustees and a mission-defining strategic plan, Bryant has embarked on a period of major growth and activity.

While alumni are the largest group of donors to Bryant, gifts from all sources – including foundations, corporations and individuals – are up significantly this year. The year-to-date total is $1,001,890, 31 percent higher than the same period last year.

Musgrove pointed out that Bryant's fiscal year doesn't end until July 31, and all gifts received by that date will count toward the year's total.

For details on how to make a gift, please call the Annual Fund Office at 401-232-6252.

▲ Taking it Easy – Imagine watching a Bulldog basketball game from a comfortable courtside easy chair. Two lucky winners at each home game get to do just that – in a pair of recliners donated by Cardi Furniture. The Cardi brothers – Nick, Ron and Pete – liked the V.I.P. seating idea so much that they decided to shoot a television commercial in Bryant's gym. A truckload of recliners was delivered, and Bryant students and friends were cast to portray the Bryant Bulldogs (athletic rules prohibit the use of actual team players).

1997-98 ENROLLMENT AT A FOUR-YEAR HIGH

The number of freshmen coming to Bryant next fall is already up more than 12 percent over last year, with several months to go in the enrollment cycle. It is the highest enrollment in four years, reports Dean of Admission and Financial Aid Margaret Drugovich.

"This response from high-school seniors is recognition of Bryant's ability to prepare students to succeed in the global marketplace of tomorrow," said President Ronald K. Machtley. He added that he is especially happy with the enrollment numbers during a period of mixed enrollment trends nationwide.

So far, 640 high school students have chosen Bryant, and more are expected to do so before September.

Applications to Bryant were also up substantially this year. There was a 12 percent increase in freshmen applicants, with 2,115 from the U.S. and 51 foreign countries.

"Studies reveal that students select Bryant over other schools because of its international reputation for quality academic programs that balance business with liberal arts study," says Drugovich.

WOMEN'S SUMMIT WILL ADDRESS WORKPLACE ISSUES

Rhode Island Senator John Chafee and College President Ronald K. Machtley have announced a Rhode Island summit for women that will examine new paradigms of family, work and community.

The Women's Summit: Rising to Work Place Challenges in the Next Millennium will be held at Bryant in September. It will address work-related issues that disproportionately affect women, including: gender relations in the work environment; maintaining a balance between work and home; self-employment; difficulties for displaced homemakers; effective networking; finding family "friendly" companies; and other challenges.

The summit will focus on the opportunities and challenges for working women, highlighting a new era of entrepreneurship in health care, finance, telecommunications, and in the international arena. Aimed at stimulating dialogue between the public, students, experts, elected officials and working women and men, the forum will encourage participants to discuss their experiences and to exchange ideas for progress.

The summit will be free and open to the public, funded through support from organizations within the state. Business and civic leaders, educators, students, state and local government officials and other interested citizens will be invited. For further information, call Virginia Martin of the Public Forum Institute at 202-467-2772.

Jack Keigwin, executive in residence, has been appointed to the Rhode Island Board of Governors for Higher Education by Governor Lincoln Almond. He was nominated by Dr. Edward Liston, president of the Community College of Rhode Island and Dr. Robert Carothers, president of the University of Rhode Island.

Professor Pedro Beade presented a paper titled "Ralph Adams Cram and the Gothic Revival in American Architecture" at the annual meeting of the American Culture Association, which was held in March in San Antonio, TX.

Professor Harsh Luthar's article, "Gender Differences in Evaluation of Performance and Leadership Ability: Autocratic vs. Democratic Managers," has been published in Sex Roles: A Journal of Research.

Professors Gail Wright and Steve Sutton hosted the second KPMG Peat Marwick Research on Accounting Ethics Symposium on campus in June.

Members of the Bryant Marketing Association were presented with the Chapter Performance Award from the American Marketing Association for exemplary performance during the 1996-97 academic year. The BMA was recognized as being one of the most proficient collegiate chapters in the nation and cited for superior performance, dedication and diligence.

Professor Fawzia Ahmad recently presented her paper, "Les dichotomies culturelles: les espaces, ontologiques dans les écrits de Mouloud Feraoun at de Salman Rushdie," at the CIEF (conseil international d'études franco-phones) conference in France.

Professor Nanci Weinberger presented "Speculating About Infant Stimulus Retreats" at the annual New England Mini-Conference on Infant Studies, which was held at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst in January.

BRYANT GETS $2 MILLION GRANT

Bryant recently won a $2 million federal grant to develop and maintain a computerized database on defense technologies that can be shared with private industries nationwide.

The Center for International Business and Economic Development (CIBED) will be the lead participant in developing the pilot program. It will be assisted by the University of New Hampshire's Whittmore School of Business.

Bryant was selected in part because of the success of the Rhode Island Export Assistance Center's International Trade Data Network (ITDN), which is considered the top international trade information resource available to businesses in the United States today.

"This grant will allow Bryant College to serve small and medium sized businesses in new ways," says Jim Segovis, director of CIBED. "It will help them access critical new technologies to make them more competitive with potential new products and enhanced production systems. Also, our new partnership with the University of New Hampshire opens new opportunities to share and work together to improve the New England economy."

Senator John H. Chafee was a driving force behind the grant. In the last Congressional session, he introduced and won passage of an amendment that required the Department of Defense to use the resources of Small Business Development Centers such as Bryant's.

The grant program will implement the successful CIBED model of integrating Bryant staff, faculty, students, consultants and the business community. This is Bryant's second defense conversion grant. A $2 million grant the College received in 1992 was used to launch CIBED.

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS WILL LEARN ABOUT INTERNATIONAL MARKETS AT BRYANT CAMP

The Rhode Island Export Assistance Center at Bryant is bringing about 20 high school students to campus this summer for a six-week camp. The students will learn about the Center's International Trade Data Network (ITDN).

ITDN is a computer program that offers detailed information about international markets. It can search and retrieve information by region, country, industry, market trend and other categories. Students can use it to learn about the world economy and international business opportunities. At the summer camp, students will develop an international business plan for a real company with the help of ITDN.

The campers will also participate in an international science project. They will test the water of the Blackstone River to find out about the effects of homes, roads and textile mills in the area. They will then compare their results with those of British high school students who will test a similar river in England.

Don Farias, manager of the ITDN High School Program, says the summer camp should be the first of many at Bryant.

"The summer program emphasizes Bryant's vision and commitment to international studies and global awareness," he says.

"This experience will give students a competitive advantage and help build a road map to a successful career."

CAL STATE SCHOLAR WILL HEAD ACADEMIC AFFAIRS

Dr. V. K. Unni, the dean of the School of Business and Public Administration at the California State University/Bakersfield, has been named Bryant's vice president for academic affairs. He begins his duties August 1.

"I was very impressed with the academic programs and the strategic initiatives at Bryant during the interview process," Unni said. "I'm excited to be a part of the College."

Unni is a professor of management and holds an M.B.A. in marketing from Atlanta University and a D.B.A. in management from Louisiana Tech University. He has served on the faculty of the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania. He was attracted to Bryant partly because of its approach to business education and its AACSB accreditation.

"I believe in a strong liberal arts background for business students," he said. "It is not enough for students to be aware of their specialty only."

Unni will spend his first few months at Bryant getting to know the faculty and institutional culture. He hopes to maintain strong connections with alumni and other stakeholders of the college.

"Academic affairs needs feedback from people in the real world," he said. "Alumni involvement is part of what keeps our programs relevant and successful."

▲ At the start of this year's Commencement festivities, Bryant proudly raised its new flag. The flag bears the redesigned Bryant logo, and proclaims the College motto: Expanding the World of Opportunity. Pictured raising the flag are President Machtley and Director of Public Safety George Coronado.

ALBERG RETIRES AFTER ALMOST 40 YEARS

A College meeting room was recently dedicated to Richard Alberg, former dean of academic administration, who retired this year after almost 40 years at Bryant.

The meeting room, formerly called the LIBOL, overlooks the college library.

When he first arrived at the College as an instructor, Alberg was only a decade older than his students. He helped lead the College through many major changes, from its early days as a commuter college to its present status as one of the top three business specialty colleges in the country.

Along the way, Alberg himself rose from instructor to dean, with a two-year stint as interim vice president for academic affairs. He had delayed his retirement to co-chair last fall's inauguration of President Machtley.

FORMER BRYANT PRESIDENTS NAMED TO TOP POSTS

Former Bryant President William E. Trueheart, Ed.D., has been named president of Reading is Fundamental, Inc., the nation's oldest and largest volunteer literacy organization serving 3.7 million children. Trueheart was a visiting scholar at the Graduate School of Education at Harvard University.

James A. Norton, Ph.D., who served as interim president of Bryant for the 1995–96 academic year, has been named interim president of Adelphi University in New York. Since retiring as a professor of government at the University of Virginia in 1988, he has served as interim president at Hiram College in Hiram, Ohio; the Lamar University system in Texas; and the University of Maryland system.

BRYANT NAMES NEW TRUSTEES

Bryant has added seven new members to its board of trustees this year. Each will serve a three-year term.

Beginning their terms in January were:

Raymond Iannetta '71, is co-owner of Industrial Science Associates, a consulting firm organized in 1996 to help technology and manufacturing companies outsource their science and engineering. Iannetta is also president of Protex Air, established in January by Industrial Science Associates. The company manufactures and markets its patented products that reduce pollutants emitted by diesel engines by up to 99 percent. Both companies are in Newport. He also co-founded both Key-Tech, Inc. and Poly-Flex Circuits.

Iannetta is a member of Bryant's Entrepreneurial Committee, a former member of the Visiting Executive Council and a founding member of the Advisory Council for the Export Assistance Center. He received a Distinguished Alumnus Award in 1996.

Heidi Kirk is the wife of the late Chester Kirk, chairman and founder of Amtrol, Inc. and Edgehill Newport. She received an Honorary Doctor of Humane Letters from the University of Rhode Island in 1995 and is currently chair of the Advisory Board for the International Engineering Program at U.R.I. She is a member of the President's Council at Providence College, a corporator of Kent County Memorial Hospital, and a governor of Rhode Island Hospital.

Kirk is past president of the Rhode Island Philharmonic, a former board member of the Children's Crusade for Higher Education, and a former member of the Brown Annual Fund Medical Committee. She has also been involved with Save the Bay and the Providence Preservation Society.

M. Osman Siddique is founder, chairman and president of Travelogue, Inc., the largest travel management company in Washington, D.C., and the largest minority-owned travel company in the nation. Siddique was nominated a delegate to the White House Conference on Travel and Tourism in 1995. He was a member of the official U.S. delegation led by former Commerce Secretary Ron Brown to the First Hemispheric Trade and Commerce Forum. He was also a member of the International Observer Delegation to the Bangladesh Parliamentary Elections.

Siddique is a founding member of CORP-NET International, Inc.; a founding director and member of the International Islamic Chamber of Commerce; Chairman of the Board of TravelNet, Inc.; and co-chairman of the United States-Bangladesh Congressional Caucus.

Beginning their terms in August are:

Robert D. Graybill '97, who serves as a recent graduate trustee, will enter a computer consulting training program in July with Andersen Consulting in Hartford, Conn. Graybill received a B.S. in Business Administration, marketing concentration, with a political science minor, summa cum laude, at Bryant's Commencement in May. He also received a Commencement Award.

As an undergraduate, Graybill served as an international research assistant/student coordinator for the Rhode Island Export Assistance Center on campus. He was a member of the Student Senate and a Rotary Exchange Student, and participated in a number of volunteer activities and clubs on campus. In 1995, he served as a legislative intern in Washington, D.C., for New Hampshire Senator Judd Gregg.

Frederick C. Lohrum '96H, is chairman and chief executive officer of Rhode Island Hospital Trust National Bank, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bank Boston Corporation. He was elected to his present position in February 1992 after having served as chairman, president and chief executive officer of BankBoston in Connecticut.

Lohrum serves on the boards of the United Way of Southeastern New England, the Greater Providence Chamber of Commerce, the Providence Foundation, Coalition for Community Development, Rhode Island Hospital, Hospice Care of Rhode Island and Business Volunteers for the Arts/RI. He has been recognized with a number of awards and, in 1996, received an honorary degree from Bryant.

Thomas S. Marotta '67, is chairman and chief executive officer of Marotta Scientific Controls, Inc. of Montville, New Jersey, a major developer and supplier of liquid and gas control components, subsystems and systems. He has been with the company for 30 years and served as chairman and president for the past 16 years.

Marotta is immediate past president of the board of trustees of Morristown Beard School, trustee of the College of Aeronautics, director of the New Jersey Manufacturers Insurance Company, trustee of St. Clare's-Riverside Medical Center and immediate past chairman of the board of directors of the Morris County Chamber of Commerce.

John K. Welch was appointed president of General Dynamics Electric Boat Division in October 1995. Previous assignments included division vice president for programs and division vice president for program development. A former U.S. Navy submarine officer, he joined General Dynamics in 1989.

Welch served on the board of directors of Eastern Connecticut Symphony Orchestra; board of directors of the United Way of Southeastern Connecticut, board and 1994 campaign chairman; Naval Submarine League Advisory Council, and American Society of Mechanical Engineers Division Chairman.

1996–97 Bryant College Athletic Highlights

- Junior Jared Dewey of the men's soccer team was a first-team all-Northeast-10 selection. He was the 17th leading scorer in NCAA Division II (2.25 points-per-match) and eighth leading goal scorer (1.00 goals-per-match).
- Volleyball posted an 18–13 record, winning the Bryant Halloween Invitational, reaching the final of Bryant Classic and the semi-finals on the Northeast-10 Tournament. Junior Janet Rooney and junior Jennifer Carvalho were named to the all-conference team. Senior co-captain Stacy Defaranos was named to the NE-10 all-tournament team.
- Two members of the women's cross-country squad earned post-season accolades. Freshman Nikki Rogerson was the NE-10 Freshman of the Year and a first-team all-conference choice. Sophomore Michele Mottola was also named to the all-conference second team.
- A young squad (only one senior) on the rise is the women's tennis team. The Bulldogs had an 8–7 record this fall with sophomore Jen Kiellar and freshman Jennifer Flaherty earning NE-10 Player and Freshman of the Week honors, respectively.
- Senior point guard Mary Beth Feeney closed out her college basketball career in style. Feeney, an honorable mention all-NE-10 choice, set school women's records for most three-pointers in a season (61) and a career (161).

Keep an eye on freshman forward Jennifer MacDonald, who, after only one season, has Feeney's records in her sights. She shattered Feeney's freshman single-season three-point mark this winter, draining 41 treys.

- A loss in the conference final did not diminish the accomplishments of the men's basketball team. The Bulldogs recorded an 18–10 record, their best since 1980–81, and were ranked nationally (18th in NCAA Division II) for the first time since 1979–80.

Only one word could describe the performance of senior guard Noel Watson: brilliant. The post season honors were numerous: first-team all-conference, ECAC Division II North All-Star and National Association of Basketball Coaches all-District One selection. He also earned the New England Basketball Coaches Association's Academic Achievement Award. Watson leaves Bryant as the fifth leading scorer in school history (1,554 points).

- Watson's backcourt mate was electrifying senior point guard Herman Thomas. A second-team all-conference selection, Thomas became the 23rd men's player in Bryant history to reach the 1,000-point plateau in the Bulldogs 83–74 triumph at St. Anselm.
- The baseball team registered back-to-back 20-win seasons for the first time since 1985–86. Among the Bulldogs' wins was a stunning 11–9 victory over then second-ranked St. Joseph's in Fort Myers, FL.
- Five Bulldogs made the all-conference squad and two (senior relief pitcher Chris Baldwin and senior shortstop Vic Donato) were named to the American Baseball Coaches Association All-Northeast Region Team.
- Despite losing its top three players from last season's NCAA Tournament squad, men's tennis managed an impressive third-place finish at the NE-10 Tournament held at St. Michael's. Senior co-captain Mike Gisler advanced to the conference final in #1 flight singles play, and he teamed with fellow senior co-captain Derek Ryan to reach the #1 doubles final.
- The nationally-ranked golf team continued its unprecedented success, capturing its 14th conference title in 16 years and participating in the NCAA Division II Northeast Regional in New Castle, IN.

Senior Ray Issler won the NE-10 Player of the Year Award for a record-setting fourth consecutive season and the Guy Tedesco Award, given to the top college golfer in New England. Issler was also Bryant College's Male Athlete of the Year.

- Two-sport athlete Kristin Regan earned the Bryant College Female Athlete of the Year Award. A captain of both the basketball and softball teams, Regan averaged 9.3 points and 8.4 rebounds on the hardwood and batted .341 on the diamond.
- Several exceptional student-athletes were recognized at the College's Annual Athletic Awards Banquet. Women's soccer's Beth Guay and baseball's Scott Powers won the Alumni Association Scholar-Athlete Award; volleyball's Stacy Defaranos and Herman Thomas earned the William T. O'Hara Award (seniors who have demonstrated leadership, integrity and above-average athletic talent); Noel Watson took home the Omar Shareef Spirit Award (student-athlete who best exemplifies the characteristics of Omar Shareef; leadership, team spirit, dedication and support to teammates and athletic peers); and Regan and Issler, winners of the female and male Athlete of the Year Award.

BRYANT'S FOURTH

MEDEIROS WINS GRANT TO WORK IN PORTUGAL

Comparative literature professor Paulo Medeiros became Bryant College's fourth Fulbright scholar when his application to teach in Portugal was accepted by the prestigious academic program.

Four Fulbrights: Paulo Medeiros (left), Bryant's most recent Fulbright scholar, is joined by previous recipients Joseph Urgo, Roger Anderson and Robert Conti.

FULBRIGHT

Bryant now boasts four Fulbright scholars, two in its liberal arts faculty and two in business, reflecting the College's commitment to excellence in both spheres of education.

Medeiros will travel to the University of Lisbon, where he will teach "Money, Gifts and Spirit," a graduate course that explores the relationship between money and gifts, and the significance of gift-giving in relationships. While visiting the country, he will also participate in academic conferences and use the regional libraries for his own research.

"I'm looking forward to benefiting enormously from this extended visit," says Medeiros, a Portuguese native. "I have gone back to Portugal, but not often. When I travel to conferences, there isn't really time to track manuscripts or conduct serious work in the libraries."

The course Medeiros will teach will be a slightly advanced version of a course he teaches to Bryant undergraduates. He applied to teach at the University of Lisbon because it is the only university in Portugal with a doctoral program in literary theory.

"I want students to reflect on the way so many decisions in life are based on systems of exchange," he says. "I want to look at the ways money can be conceived of in philosophical terms."

"I want this course to be radically different from what students are used to," he says.

Medeiros became interested in the subject of money and exchange while he was a doctoral student at the University of Massachusetts. He wrote his dissertation on representations of consumption after studying with Marc Shell, the author of Money, Language and Thought. Shell wrote about the social upheaval caused by the transition from gold to paper-based currency. Today, Medeiros says, a similar transition is going on as people begin to rely on electronic cash exchanges.

In addition to money and exchange, Medeiros studies issues of national identity, especially involving Portugal. He is on the board of the American Portuguese Studies Association, and co-edited the first issue of its journal.

"This will be a tremendous benefit to me both in and out of my teaching assignment," he says. "And I look forward to sharing my experiences with my Bryant students when I return."

ABOUT THE FULBRIGHT PROGRAM

The Fulbright Program was established by Congress in 1946 through legislation introduced by Senator J. William Fulbright of Arkansas. Its purpose is to increase understanding between the people of the United States and other countries.

Grants are made both to foreign scholars who come to the U.S. and to U.S. scholars who travel abroad. Recipients may study, teach, lecture or conduct research in their host countries. They are chosen because of their academic or professional qualifications, as well as their ability and willingness to share ideas and experiences with people of diverse cultures.

About 5,000 new grants are awarded every year. More than 200,000 grants – 90,000 from the United States and 120,000 abroad – have been awarded since the program began. More than 150 countries now participate.

The Fulbright Program is funded primarily by Congress. Host governments and institutions also contribute financially through cost-sharing and indirect support such as salary supplements, tuition waivers, housing, and other benefits.

Bryant's other three Fulbrights testify to the benefits of conducting scholarship in other countries.

Roger Anderson, professor of management and now academic dean, became Bryant's first Fulbright scholar in 1990.

"It was one of the best experiences of my professional life," says Anderson, who taught at Dokuz Eylul University in Turkey. "I was developing new materials and learning a lot on my own. I made connections that I had not made before. I came back with a richer and deeper appreciation of myself and my field."

Anderson taught a course called Transfer of Technology and Technique from the Developed to the Developing World. He chose Turkey because a colleague had interested him in the culture, and developed the course after doing research to find out what would be interesting and useful to Turkish students. Teaching a management course abroad, he says, taught him about the cultural boundaries of the discipline.

"Students appreciated the give and take in our relationship," he says. "They saw the humor that can come from a cultural clash."

Anderson also says his interactions with other faculty members helped expand his thinking.

"Almost every Friday, one particular economics professor stopped by my office," he says. "Our discussions were so far-ranging – from population growth and economic development to the difference between a prophet and a messiah. It was immensely enriching."

"I had the time of my life on my Fulbright," he says. "It was great in every respect."

It was one of the best experiences of my professional life...I came back with a richer and deeper appreciation of myself and my field.

Professor of Humanities Joseph Urgo was awarded Bryant's second Fulbright in 1992.

Urgo had heard from a colleague that the University of Oviedo and the University of Leon in Spain were looking for a Faulkner specialist through the Fulbright program. Having written a doctoral thesis and a book on Faulkner, Urgo applied and was accepted.

"It was a tremendously rewarding experience," he says. "It always helps your teaching to see your material as an outsider, as if for the first time."

Urgo says his Spanish students assumed that literature is a window into a culture, and were very curious about the relationship between American literature and the television they saw. Urgo was in Spain during the Los Angeles riots, and his students saw parallels between those events and Faulkner's treatment of race.

“The experience made me much more aware of the complexity of the relationship between literature and culture,” he says.

Urgo created an ongoing exchange between Bryant and the University of Leon when his Fulbright ended. So far, three English professors from each institution have visited. They hope to expand the program to include students and faculty from other disciplines. Urgo himself has been invited back to Spain twice, for conferences on American short stories and American Studies.

“American Studies is very active in Europe,” he says. “There is great interest in our culture. And I think it’s important to bring back to U.S. students the assumptions others make.”

professor of humanities

Associate Professor of Management Robert Conti was the most recent Bryant scholar to return from a Fulbright. He taught operations management in the Executive M.B.A. program at the University of Malta in 1996–97.

Malta was attractive to him both because courses were taught in English and because the University was looking for someone with academic and manufacturing experience. Conti gained more than 30 years of manufacturing management experience before earning a Ph.D.

“Malta was a unique opportunity,” he says. “The Maltese students brought a different cultural outlook and different insights.” He says he has modified his courses at Bryant as a result of his experience, introducing more extensive international themes.

Conti has also taught at the University of Cambridge as part of his post-doctoral work, and has studied manufacturing in Japan, so his courses already incorporated international issues. However, he says, the Fulbright provided a richer view of cultural exchange.

“It is always worthwhile to re-evaluate course material and gear it toward a new group of students,” he says. “The Fulbright experience enriched my research and my teaching. And from a personal standpoint, it was a privilege to have a chance to live and work on an island in the Mediterranean.” ▲

BankBoston President and Chief Operating Officer Henrique de Campos Meirelles urged the Class of 1997 to be flexible, resilient and ethical in his keynote address at Bryant's 134 Commencement.

"The most successful professionals are the ones who are able to learn quickly and keep learning," he told the graduates, who gathered under sunny skies that seemed to clear just for the occasion. "You have to take ownership of your career, your development, your connections, your mentor relationships — your own life."

Meirelles, a Brazilian native, was named president and COO of the $62.3-billion super-regional bank holding company in July 1996. He came to BankBoston in 1974, and has worked for the company in Boston and Brazil.

Honorary degree recipients are international business leaders

Bryant awarded five honorary Doctor of Business Administration degrees during 1997 Commencement exercises. The recipients, all highly accomplished individuals, came from diverse parts of the world and sectors of business, reflecting Bryant's commitment to excellence and diversity.

Joanna T. Lau is president of LAU Technologies, a manufacturer of electronic systems for U.S. military and commercial applications. She emigrated from Hong Kong in 1976, and has had an illustrious engineering career, with awards spanning from GE Aircraft Engine's Young Engineering Award in 1987 to Inc. magazine's 1995 National Turnaround Entrepreneur of the Year.

Henrique de Campos Meirelles is an international financier, president and chief operating officer of BankBoston. He is the former executive director of Brazilian Federation of Banks, and was named Most Influential Banker of the year of 1996 by Latin Trade magazine.

Robert K. Kraft is owner and CEO of the New England Patriots, owner of Foxboro Stadium, and president of Rand-Whitney Group and the International Forest Products Group of Companies, one of the largest privately owned paper and packaging companies in the nation. He also chairs Chestnut Hill Management, a money management firm.

Barbara A. Papitto was a member of the Bryant Board of Trustees from 1987 to 1996, when she was named an honorary active trustee. She has provided superior leadership for the Bryant Annual Fund drive, the Alumni Association and the Graduate School Advisory Council. She is an active community leader, and has served on the boards of numerous charitable organizations.

Christian Schwarz-Shilling, a native of Innsbruck, Austria, has been a member of the German Parliament for 37 years. He has been minister of post and telecommunications, heading the largest single government-owned company, German Bundespost. He liberalized telecommunications services in Germany, paving the way for privatization and private competition.

In convening the Commencement exercises, Trustee Chairman John E. Wolfe told graduates that Meirelles and the other honorary degree recipients symbolized the new internationalism in business.

“The world is not only your oyster,” he said. “It is your marketplace.”

Bryant President Ronald K. Machtley, presiding over his first Commencement at the College, told the graduates they were destined for greatness.

“You’re going to read about members of this class in the future,” he said. “This is a great class...I am proud to send them forth.”

Honored guests at the ceremony included Rhode Island Governor Lincoln Almond and Senator Jack Reed.

Student speaker Ellen Mary Boland quoted Lord Byron, and told her fellow graduates: “Let us carve a straight and moral path and let us look ahead without fear.”

Lau captivates graduate degree recipients

Graduate Commencement speaker Joanna Lau urged graduate students to embrace life and work at the 1997 Commencement exercises.

"Every decision is a good decision," she said. "Life will teach you again and again that the only bad move is to wait."

The ceremony, moved indoors because of high winds and threatening skies, included about 500 graduates and guests.

President Ronald K. Machtley welcomed graduates to the elite five percent of the population who hold graduate degrees.

"This degree is a passport to a more prosperous and prolific life," he said. "We salute you for your ambition and success."

Ernest A. Almonte '78, '85MST, trustee and president of the National Alumni Council, welcomed the graduates into the 36,000-strong Alumni Association.

I am proud to send them forth."

Three experts discuss the New England economy

David Wyss is Chief Financial Economist at DRI/McGraw-Hill in Lexington, Massachusetts, the largest economic forecasting firm in the U.S.

JACK WOLFE: Let's first take a look at the world as a whole. Do we have a strong and sustainable world economy?

DAVID WYSS: We have a very strong world economy if you leave Europe and Japan out of it. You now see very strong growth in the emerging markets, good growth in the United States and continued sluggishness in Europe and Japan. Europe is being slowed down because of a move toward a common currency. They are trying to reduce budget deficits that put a lot of fiscal drag on their economies. They can't lower interest rates as much as they would like because of the globalization of markets and the fact that U.S. interest rates are going up, and that is dragging the German rates up with them. So, markets are nervous, and that is putting a drag on the economy. Japan has been stuck in a 1 percent growth for about five years.

PAT NORTON: In relative terms, the U.S. economy has been the star of the decade if only because the East Asian miracle economies are not looking quite as miraculous as they did in the '80s and '70s. The US is the world's foremost economy and its growth is projected to continue – and that's after six years of expansion. In the beginning of the decade, investment advisors thought that the place to invest was in the rest of the world – East Asia, maybe Europe – but that turned out not to be the case. We are in a decade marked by the reassertion of U.S. leadership in the world economy.

DAVID WYSS: Pat is right that Hong Kong, Taiwan and Korea are not quite the miracles they were back in the '80s, but China now has had five years in a row of double digit growth. We are seeing growth shifting to the poorer countries in Asia from the "four tigers" that dominated the '70s and '80s. For Latin America, the '80s was a lost decade – virtually no growth. In the '90s, except for the minor collapse of the Mexican peso two years ago, the economies are actually doing pretty well right now. Mexico is starting to recover after two years of recession. In the industrial countries, the U.S. has been the driving economy. We've been helped by a number of factors, among them: a reduction in the budget deficit, which has helped allow interest rates to come down; good management by the Federal Reserve, which has prevented inflation from rising, and a lack of any major external shocks; we are living in a more peaceful world.

PAT NORTON: What's driving the expansion of the world economy is the triumph of capitalism and the liberalization of markets worldwide. That was a tremendous shock to Eastern Europe and to the former Soviet Union in the early part of this decade. The transition there severely retarded world economic development and world growth. The transition is difficult, and it has not yet been accomplished. But now those economies have taken their lumps and are beginning to experience economic expansion. The larger story of the '90s – and I think it is emphasized by the kind of bureaucratized, over-regulated capitalism Japan has suffered, but that looked to the rest of world like Japan's triumph in the '80s – is more market-based capitalism spreading throughout the world. And Japan and Europe have yet to catch up with that over the decade.

Pat Norton is the Norman Sarkisian Professor of business economics at Bryant College.

DAVID WYSS: One feature of the collapse of communism and the fall of the Berlin Wall is that West Germany has been hit with a bill for essentially redeveloping East Germany. That has pushed interest rates up in Germany, diverting funds that might otherwise have been used for investment in West Germany into social programs, into cleaning up the mess in East Germany. That's been a drag on growth in the common market.

New England in the '90s

JACK WOLFE: Second, how has the New England economy fared in recent years?

DAVID WYSS: The New England economy has clearly bounced back from the recession of the late '80s. We have seen substantial recovery, particularly in the Boston metro area, from the extreme weakness that followed the collapse of the Massachusetts miracle around 1987–88. Massachusetts is now well below the national average in terms of the unemployment rate, below 4 percent. But we actually have fewer employees in the state than a decade ago. That reflects the fact that a lot of workers left the state or dropped out of the labor market. This is one of the reasons that home prices haven't recovered the levels that they were at back in 1987, much to the distress of those who bought in 1986–89.

PAT NORTON: I have a lot more respect for the New England economy having visited the Philadelphia area a few weeks ago. Heretofore, I have been struck by how New England is still lagging behind its 1989 job peak, as David suggested. We had to get over the tremendous hammer blows of demilitarization and of something which probably was even harder on the mid-Atlantic region, which was de-bureaucratization, i.e., the tremendous winnowing out of middle management that computerized networks have made possible – which hit the Northeast harder than other regions in the U.S. As a result, while the U.S. economy has added 12 million wage and salary, non-farm jobs in the '90s, the Northeast, as a region, has not added any. That's principally because New York state lost a tremendous number. Having visited Philadelphia and Chicago recently, and having written a book called City Life Cycles way back, I was struck by the difference in the capacity of these giant, old industrial centers to move on. Boston has been able to move, Chicago too, but Philadelphia is a wasteland in terms of new private investment.

DAVID WYSS: It's really the mid-Atlantic states in the most trouble. New York is in even worse shape than Philadelphia. They are running a 10 percent unemployment rate, more than double Boston's. For major metropolitan areas, we've done pretty well up here, especially for an area which really lost most of its major industry with the cutbacks in defense.

PAT NORTON: We sponsored a conference in Boston in October on defense conversion and regional resilience. This was something that Bryant organized and we were fortunate enough to have economists from Texas, California, Virginia and from the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago. They told us about the Midwest revival, a story largely of learning from defeat in the '70s and '80s...and coming back in a leaner and not necessarily meaner fashion, to be able to compete.

JACK WOLFE: If we look at the venture capital community, my last memory says that something close to 40 percent of venture capital dollars go into Massachusetts and California.

DAVID WYSS: That's where a lot of the early development comes from. What's happening, though, in many cases, is that the research and development is done in Silicon Valley or along Route 128, but then manufacturing facilities get moved to Salt Lake City.

Jack Wolfe is founder and president of two manufacturing companies in New England, and chairman of Bryant College's Board of Trustees.

JACK WOLFE: What are the major factors that have made New England successful?

DAVID WYSS: You have to look at what has happened to the financial community in New England. The tremendous rise of financial management has been heavily driven by the growth of the mutual fund industry, in turn driven by some legislative changes – the growth of 401K programs, for example, and the growth of the size of pension funds – as well as the strong advantages that New England has as an operating place for the mutual fund industry. In New England we also have seen the education institutions at the core of development, both in the semiconductor industry, hardware, and in the software business that is currently driving more of the high-tech employment in this area. That's extending now beyond things like computers to areas like genetic testing, the new biotechnology firms that are growing in importance. The employment base is still pretty small, but certainly that is beginning to be the real exciting growth industry in this area.

PAT NORTON: Yes, I agree completely. The comparative advantage of New England is in brainware, including not only software, but also education, hospitals – in other words, our export services. Also, the financial sector, of course. All of those demand a substantial level of education on the part of the employees in this sector, and that is what we can provide them with.

DAVID WYSS: One other change that has occurred in New England is that politicians have made it a more business-friendly climate, in most of the states. One example of that is a study we do for Mastercard yearly, looking at where credit card operations should be established and which are the most friendly states for credit card operations. Rhode Island was in the bottom ten on that list two years ago, but it's now in the top ten.

JACK WOLFE: What risks do you see ahead for New England?

DAVID WYSS: We've got the big risks that every area of the country faces. New England's growth, however, is pretty well diversified at this time. One problem that New England always has is that it is a very energy dependent area, particularly for the manufacturing sector. That makes it more vulnerable to oil price shocks. Another problem is that this is still a pretty expensive place to operate. In a global environment, costs become a major item for any manufacturer. It's hard to locate manufacturing operations in New England and be competitive on a global basis. New England is not going to keep up. It's like the red queen – you've got to run faster and faster just to stay in place. You have to outrun technology in order to keep the edge that New England has.

PAT NORTON: In many respects, New England is like Europe. It is more innovative than the collective Europe has been, technologically speaking, but it's a zero population growth collection and doesn't have that stimulus to job development in many sectors that areas in the South and West in the U.S. have. So, as a mature zero population growth region, New England has to live by its wits, and that is accentuated by the fact that it is a high-priced region like much of northern Europe. So, in a very competitive world economy, it does indeed have to run just to keep in place.

JACK WOLFE: Let's talk about education in the economic equation. In my travels around the world I've been struck by how much U.S. education is valued, and yet we don't export much education.

DAVID WYSS: I think we export quite a bit of U.S. education. Look at the percentage of foreign students at U.S. universities. In a lot of graduate programs in engineering and science right now foreign students account for nearly half the graduate students in the United States.

PAT NORTON: One of the great pleasures of my 12 years at Bryant has been seeing the Bryant undergraduate student body become more cosmopolitan and diversified. There's no doubt that that really makes a classroom more sophisticated, more interesting, more stimulating for the students, as well as for the professors.

The Outlook for Rhode Island

JACK WOLFE: I think the faculty deserves a lot of credit, not just on the recruiting side of it, but the way that international content is integrated into the curriculum.

Let's focus now on Rhode Island. Has Rhode Island participated in the same degree as New England and the nation in our reasonably strong global growth?

DAVID WYSS: Rhode Island has not kept pace with northern New England in the recent recovery. It went downhill a little bit earlier than Boston and it hasn't bounced back as well – in part because of the industrial mix. Boston's bounceback was not in the industries that dominated the '80s but much more in the software and financial services industries. Rhode Island had always been more of a manufacturing part of New England and it's had more difficulty as a result of the cost disadvantages.

PAT NORTON: Rhode Island's situation was recently addressed by a fine, incisive study called Meeting the Challenge of the New Economy, which was authored by Governor Almond, Rob Atkinson, and Larry Fish. They cited the syndrome of underinvestment in Rhode Island as a key factor behind the road of stagnation David mentioned. What they proposed is that in Rhode Island we leapfrog our industrial legacy by starting a Samuel Slater Technology Center to help accelerate the diffusion of technology and the incubation of technology.

JACK WOLFE: Let me ask you both to compare Rhode Island's rate of growth, at least over the last five or six years, to New England's and the nation's. And look, too, at the relative employment rates in Rhode Island.

PAT NORTON: Rhode Island's employment for non-farm, wage and salary jobs peaked in 1989 at 462,000. And, by the way, that's about when the population peaked also, at just around one million people. As of 1996, averaged, Rhode Island's employment was only back to about 442,000. It's about 10,000 less, and it just happens by coincidence that the same absolute decline of about 10,000 also characterized Rhode Island's population.

DAVID WYSS: You can also look at this in terms of the unemployment rather than the employment. In Rhode Island today, Providence has a 6.3 percent unemployment rate compared with 3.5 percent in Boston. The growth has started in the middle – as Boston is the center of New England – and it is now getting to Providence.

PAT NORTON: That points out why we are so glad to have Fidelity Investments in Rhode Island. In a larger sense, there has tended to be a spill-over of the Boston metropolitan prosperity north rather than south. Maybe that is just a matter of linear distances, but it has been the case that New Hampshire has benefited much more from Route 128 dynamism than Rhode Island has. Now the Fidelity case is a counter case, so it's great to see Fidelity locating in Rhode Island with great jobs and big ambitions right across the street from Bryant, because maybe it signals a southward orientation in other activities, as well.

JACK WOLFE: For those of us who know and love Rhode Island, what are some of the things we can do to make Rhode Island more successful? We have a set of great educational institutions with a wonderful mix of technical and business skills, as well as a caring and hard-driving people. If you two were both to think of a strategy for Rhode Island's economic success, what would some of the ingredients be?

DAVID WYSS: To start with, you have got to keep more of the college students in this state. One of the problems Rhode Island has – along with some other, mainly Midwestern, states – is that you educate the people, and certainly the Rhode Island educators do a good job of that, but then they leave. Boston has done a better job of retaining them. As a result, it's easier to do a start-up in the Boston area than in Providence. The key to getting more venture capital operating down here is attracting it from Boston. People in Rhode Island have plenty of ideas, but they have to be translated into businesses that can operate locally.

PAT NORTON: We conducted a conference called "Creative Business Advantage in a Wired World," previewing the Internet as a force for business. I had visited beforehand with the people at the Naval Undersea Warfare Center – which, by the way, accounts for 42 percent of the patents over the last ten years in Rhode Island – and the Rhode Island Software Association, because I wanted to bring them into that picture and draw on their resources. So, what Bryant is actually doing as the educational component of that network is to try to bring people together to work out some of the inherent advantage that this state may have thanks to the NUWC presence as corner of the national defense engineering network, the high speed network that is already in place.

JACK WOLFE: For entrepreneurs in an entrepreneurial environment, to network is an invaluable ability.

PAT NORTON: That was certainly our effort at the conference. In fact, it's been a theme under the new administration at Bryant, to reach out and create networks, particularly on the high-tech front. I'm sure you know that, following our $2 million defense conversion grant we've had the last couple of years, we now have another $1 million grant from the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, and that is on technology transfer.

Conclusions

JACK WOLFE: It's time to sum up. Give us the bottom line on the U.S. economy, New England and particularly Rhode Island.

DAVID WYSS: The U.S. is now in the third longest expansion in its post-war history and it shows every sign of continuing. New England has come back a long way from the recession it suffered in the '80s, and, by and large, has a strong economy. So far, however, the southern part of New England – Connecticut and Rhode Island – have tended to lag in that recovery a little bit. They need to catch up. I think there are still some long-term structural issues that need to be addressed in both those areas to bring them up to strength.

PAT NORTON: I have been reading Undaunted Courage by Steven Ambrose, which is the story of the Lewis and Clark expedition in 1804–05. The Louisiana Purchase doubled our territory and with that extended, in the very first years of the 19th century, our sway. So much of American development is the movement west and the change in our horizons, and yet, what do we find as we approach the millennium? If anything, I think New England is viewed not as a leftover or relic, like perhaps part of the abandoned industrial Northeast. New England is viewed as a model for other parts of the United States. And I think that is a thrilling reality. ▲

Career Services helps alumni conduct sophisticated job searches

Bryant alumni who want help navigating the ever-changing job market have a permanent resource in the Office of Career Services.

“Alumni service is part of our mission,” says Director of Career Services Judith Clare ’66. “Providing services to alumni is an integral part of what we do.”

Clare says there are several situations that lead alumni back to Bryant for career support. Those who are thinking of re-entering the job market after a long time with one employer may want to learn more about the latest strategies, such as job-hunting on the Internet. Those who have been down-sized may want advice on how to compete in today’s marketplace. Those who are thinking of changing careers often want to conduct research on a specific company, a particular industry or the labor market in general.

Very often alumni request help in restructuring or updating their résumés. Many find it beneficial to do a mock interview with a counselor, particularly if they have not interviewed in a long time.

The Office of Career Services provides many services for Bryant alumni, all of which are free. In the area of technology, the office is fast becoming state-of-the-art. Within the last two years, the following technology has become part of this highly respected office and has been attracting many Bryant alumni:

- Jobtrak – an on-line job listing of positions nationwide that receives between 600 and 800 listings a day from more than 250,000 employers. Alumni can access it free from their home computers via the Internet by getting the password from Career Services (call 401-232-6090). Those who don’t have Internet access can use the terminals in the Office of Career Services.
- Sigi Plus – a computerized career exploration system that assists in the career exploration and decision-making process.
- Career Search – a CD-ROM database of more than 600,000 employers across the country, including company profiles and information.

- Internet access – four terminals with 65 bookmarked web sites on topics such as career exploration and employment.

OTHER SERVICES INCLUDE:

- The Job Source – a weekly publication of professional job openings submitted to the Office of Career Services by businesses who are interested in Bryant graduates. Alumni can receive it by sending stamped, self-addressed business-size envelopes to:
Office of Career Services
Bryant College
1150 Douglas Pike
Smithfield, RI 02917.
- Counseling – individual counseling is available for a host of career-related topics. Call to schedule an appointment.
- Workshops – held on a regular basis throughout the academic year. Topics include How to Work a Room, Job Searching on the Internet, Researching Organizations, Writing High-Impact Cover Letters, Résumé Writing, Developing Interview Skills, and many others. Video tapes of workshops can be borrowed.
- Library – highly specialized business resource library contains information on employers, industries, career exploration and the job market in general. Resources may be borrowed on an overnight basis or over the weekend.
- Office hours – during the academic year: Tuesday and Wednesday from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m., and Monday, Thursday and Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Summer hours, from July 1 to August 31: 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Alumni are welcome to use the library and technology without an appointment.

Services evolve to meet the changing needs of alumni. For instance, Clare says she ran a weekly support group for down-sized workers in the early 1990s, which no longer appears to be necessary in today's improved economy. Internet workshops, on the other hand, are increasingly popular since alumni are very eager to learn how technology can help them in their job searches. And, of course, old standbys like interviewing skills or networking workshops are popular in any economy.

In the past, Clare says, it was not unusual for an individual to work for the same company for 30 years. This is no longer the case.

“Statistics indicate that young people entering the workforce will have between 10 and 12 jobs in their lifetimes, will change careers five to six times, and will be fired at least once,” Clare says. “Given these statistics, individuals are spending a great deal of time managing their careers and making certain that they remain competitive.”

The Office of Career Services helps many Bryant alumni with these responsibilities. Last year, the office worked with 146 alumni. “We always look forward to welcoming alumni and helping them achieve their career goals.”▲

IN REMEMBRANCE

SANDRA LANGFORD

A familiar face on the Bryant College campus is seen no more. Sandra Langford, Bryant's postmistress and a 23-year employee, died in November after battling cancer.

Sandy is remembered by many Bryant alumni and students as a friend who brought them news from home. Very involved with and interested in the Bryant students, she was a dedicated professional and active member of the College community.

Sandy is survived by a son and daughter, four brothers, three sisters, and two grandsons.

Douglas Krupp is as exceptional a philanthropist as he is a businessman.

After graduating from Bryant in 1969, Douglas and his brother, George, formed the Krupp Companies, a real estate management and investment firm. In 1992, the Krupp Companies became The Berkshire Group, a holding company headquartered in Boston with regional offices throughout the country and more than $5 billion under management.

Douglas is Chairman of the Board of The Berkshire Group, which consists of two wholly-owned companies: BG Affiliates, a private investment firm, and Berkshire Mortgage Finance, one of the nation's dominant multifamily lenders. In addition, Douglas and The Berkshire Group hold substantial interest in two publicly-traded companies on the New York Stock Exchange: Berkshire Realty Company, Inc., a real estate investment trust, and Harborside Healthcare Corporation, a long-term care provider.

Despite the rapid growth of his business, Douglas and his wife Judith have always been generous with their time and resources, playing leadership roles in numerous non-profit organizations.

A trustee at Bryant since 1990, Douglas serves on committees for academic affairs and investments. He and his wife have established a scholarship fund for deserving students and made major contributions to the College's Annual Fund and other projects.

"Bryant does an excellent job of educating students," he says. "If there is one thing I'd like to enhance as a trustee, it's the relationship between students and alumni. Students need to interact with entrepreneurs and successful business people to learn how the world works." Douglas taught a class at Bryant a few years ago, and was able to spend a considerable amount of time talking to students and suggesting ways they could open doors for themselves in the job market. He'd like to see other alumni share their experiences with students through guest lectures, alumni forums and other events.

"When you graduate college, you complete one cycle," he says. "Thereafter there is an enormous amount left to learn about the business world. Colleges could benefit significantly through more interaction with alumni, community leaders and others."

Non-profit and charitable activities have played an important part in Douglas's life. He has been an active supporter of the Anti-Defamation League for more than 20 years, serving as a national commissioner and member of its National Executive Committee and Board of Trustees – and receiving the League's prestigious Community Service Award.

As corporate overseer, he has served the Combined Jewish Philanthropies and Brigham and Women's Hospital. He has generously supported AIDS research at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute as well as programs at the Fessenden School in Newton, Mass., and Ben-Gurion University in Israel.

Under his chairmanship, The Berkshire Group has sponsored a City Year Team in Boston and formed a partnership with the Eliot School, a Boston public elementary school. The Berkshire Group employees have followed his lead and participate in the company-formed partnerships to an exceptionally high degree. ▲
