The confiscated library of William Macintosh in the Bibliothèque municipale d'Avignon

Abstract

In 1795, the private library of William Macintosh, author of Travels in Europe, Asia, and Africa (1782), was seized from his home in Avignon by the revolutionary authorities. Using the inventory of this seizure as a guide, this note presents a reconstruction of Macintosh's library and identifies those books that exist today in the collections of the Bibliothèque municipale d'Avignon.

The confiscated library of William Macintosh in the Bibliothèque municipale d'Avignon

Avignon's public library, like many others in France, was established during the revolutionary period and served as a repository for books seized from ecclesiastical collections and the private libraries of individuals, particularly those émigrés who had fled the country following the Revolution.¹ Among the residents of Avignon whose books became confiscations révolutionnaires during this period was William Macintosh, a highland Scot and former Caribbean plantation owner who had earned notoriety in the 1780s following the publication of a controversial travel narrative, Travels in Europe, Asia, and Africa (1782).² In offering a stinging rebuke of the alleged corruption and mismanagement of the East India Company under the direction of Warren Hastings, Governor General of Bengal, Macintosh's book became a cause célèbre, sparking a pamphlet war and attracting a wide and influential readership across Europe and North America.³

² [William Macintosh], Travels in Europe, Asia, and Africa; describing characters, customs, manners, laws, and productions of nature and art: containing various remarks on the political and commercial interests of Great Britain; and delineating in particular, a new system for the government and improvement of the British settlements in the East Indies: begun in the year 1777, and finished in 1781, 2 vols (London: Murray, 1782).

Precisely why Macintosh chose to establish a home in Avignon in the years following the publication of his book is not immediately obvious, although it is probable that he did so partly in pursuit of commercial opportunities and partly in the hope that he might undertake, on an entirely self-appointed basis, information gathering that might benefit the British government.⁴ Whether or not it was this latter activity that brought Macintosh to the attention of the revolutionary authorities, it is evident that by 1794 he was identified by them as an émigré. In January 1795 a requisition order was therefore issued by Avignon's agent national, Pierre-Alexis Bruny (1758–1832), instructing the city's archivist, Jean-Étienne

Néry (1750–1837), to retrieve Macintosh’s books and papers from his home at Rue des 3 Testons.⁵ The seizure of Macintosh’s library—which commenced on 7 February 1795 (19 pluviôse an III)—was undertaken by two unnamed district commissioners who had been tasked with that duty by Néry and the district librarian, Jean-André Tempier. In addition to their responsibility for transporting Macintosh’s property to the district’s general depot, the commissioners compiled a narrative report of their activities and bibliographical inventory, listing approximately eighty printed books and manuscripts.⁶

It is likely that the inventory of Macintosh’s library became separated from the books it described fairly soon after their seizure; the former (along with the majority of Macintosh’s personal papers) fell under the care of the Archives départementales de Vaucluse, officially established in 1796, while the latter became part of the collections of the Bibliothèque

⁵ Avignon, Archives départementales de Vaucluse, 1 L 452, Réquisition, 23 nivôse an III (12 January 1795). On Néry’s role as librarian and archivist, see Bernard Thomas, ‘Archives et révolution en Vaucluse: l’œuvre de Jean-Étienne Néry (1750–1837)’, La Gazette des archives, 146–47 (1989), 387–407. On Bruny’s role as agent national, see Charles Soullier, Histoire de la révolution d’Avignon et du Comté-Venaissin, en 1789 et années suivantes, 2 vols (Paris: Seguin aîné; Avignon: V. Fischer-Joly, 1844), II, p. 258.

⁶ Avignon, Archives départementales de Vaucluse, 1 L 452, inventory of Macintosh’s books, 19 pluviôse an III (7 February 1795). The narrative report that precedes the inventory—while offering an amusing account of the farcical sequence of events that accompanied the seizure of Macintosh’s library (misplaced keys, confusion over meeting times, and so on)—is both grammatically and syntactically ambiguous. Although the narrative appears to place Néry and Tempier at the scene of the seizure, along with (at various times) citoyens Fauquet and Roussin-Bonnet, the inventory’s authors are not themselves explicitly identified by name.

municipale d'Avignon.⁷ A partial attempt was made to re-establish a correspondence between the inventory and the collections of the Bibliothèque municipale in 1990 under the auspices of an exhibition—"Des Ecosais à Avignon"—organised at the Médiathèque Ceccano, the branch of the Bibliothèque municipale that houses its rare books.⁸ Using the inventory as a guide, eight titles from Macintosh's library were identified in the collections of the Médiathèque Ceccano and selected for exhibition. Beyond the 1990 exhibition, however, no further attempt has been made to reconstruct Macintosh's library nor to determine how many of its titles remain in the care of the Bibliothèque municipale more generally. This is not to suggest that Macintosh has been forgotten by those archivists and librarians under whose care his materials reside; indeed, an item from his personal papers—a 1777 inventory of the Richmond Estate plantation in Dominica—was one among a small number of archival treasures selected for display in a 1996 exhibition marking the bicentenary of the Archives départementales de Vaucluse.⁹

The following listing presents a verbatim, item-level transcription of the 1795 inventory, together with the corresponding bibliographical details of the items it describes (or appears to describe): namely, date of publication, author, title, and imprint. In the interests of consistency, authors' names are presented as they appear in the English Short Title Catalogue

(ESTC) or the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography; for French-language titles, the listing follows the presentation of authors' names as they appear in the general catalogue of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. The inventory—written in French—lists mostly English-language titles and, as a consequence, displays some variability in the translation of the titles of books.¹⁰ In addition, certain works were entered into the inventory semi-phonetically; for example, the book The history of Tom Jones, a foundling (1749) appears in the inventory as “histoire du tom jaunes” (see item 14). Here, we might reasonably suppose that items were written into the inventory by one commissioner as their titles were read aloud by the other. As a result of the irregularities in the composition of the inventory, and the fact that authors' names and books' dates of publication were not systematically recorded, it is not possible to identify all items with certainty. For each item in the listing I have, as a consequence, attributed a level of certainty to their identification:

- 1) definite matches (11 titles in 14 volumes) describe those items for which there is clear provenance, usually in the form of an ownership inscription;
- 2) probable matches (45 titles in 61 volumes) describe those items that are unambiguously identifiable—and occur only once in the catalogue of the Bibliothèque municipale—but for which there is no provenance;¹¹

¹¹ The catalogue of the Bibliothèque municipale can be accessed online here:

<http://bibliotheques.avignon.fr/in/faces/advancedSearch.xhtml>

- 3) possible matches (11 titles in 21 volumes) describe those items that are somewhat ambiguous in their identification but have a sufficiently likely match in the catalogue of the Bibliothèque municipale to offer an identification;
- 4) no obvious matches (21 titles) described those items that are either ambiguous or occur too often (or no at all) in the catalogue of the Bibliothèque municipale to attribute a copy-specific identification with sufficient certainty.

Wherever possible, the listing also provides the ESTC citation number and the item's shelf mark in the Médiathèque Ceccano.¹² Details of provenance, marginalia, and other copy-specific characteristics are provided as supplementary notes to some items. NB: the numbering of items in the original inventory is neither complete nor fully sequential; some items share the same number, while others were entered without being numbered at all.
