

StuGo votes against using photo IDs

by Jon Vercellono

At the senate meeting held on October 19, a decision was reached on the photo ID question.

A survey, which had been circulated among students to get their viewpoints on the subject, was discussed. The matter was then put up for discussion and any questions concerning cost were answered.

After reviewing the situation Senator Ed Young moved to discontinue any future discussion on the matter and he called for an immediate vote on the subject.

The results of the vote were 10 pro discontinuance, 0 to continue discussion on the matter, and one abstention. Absent from the voting was Senator Sohail.

The survey results were:

1. When asked if students required a photo ID for check cashing, 105 answered yes and 50 answered no.

2. When asked if students would be willing to pay any cost of the ID, 105 answered yes and 53 answered no.

3. When asked if students would favor an ID only good on campus 2 answered yes and 11 answered no.

4. Additional ideas and suggestions included: Social Security and birthdates should be included, helpful for second ID, keep it inexpensive etc.

This matter may be brought up for future consideration at any time.

Rebels in San Salvador wounded an off-duty civil defense officer and killed his three daughters in their home Friday night in an apparent retaliation for the disappearance of 11 leftist and labor leaders.

The group of 11 were reported kidnapped Friday afternoon by armed men in plain clothes.

Scattered conflicts and acts of sabotage between rebels and army patrols followed throughout the weekend.

Test results on the seventh bottle of cyanide-laced Tylenol were disclosed Friday by an FBI spokesman. The rest revealed no additional clues.

Police are attempting to determine who returned the bottle, lot MC2880, to learn where it was purchased.

As of Sunday, 70 percent of the more than 200,000 Extra-Strength Tylenol returned or recalled had been examined.

Chicago authorities announced Monday night that yet another bottle of Tylenol has been located in a suburb of the city. The capsules were turned over to the FBI for investigation.

The award for Environmental Educator of the Year has been given to Parkland's David Monk, a part-time science instructor and director of Educational Resources in Environmental Sciences in Champaign.

Monk received the award from the Environmental Education Association of Illinois for his outstanding contributions in prairie restoration and education projects as well as art work concerning Illinois natural areas.

Twenty clubs, organizations, and associations entered the IOC Pumpkin Contest last week.

Votes will be tallied Tuesday afternoon and winners will be posted Wednesday on the Activities Office bulletin board located outside X153. Congratulations to the winners!

Parkland President William Staerkel is delighted with the apparent low bid on construction of the 14,000-square-foot building addition to Parkland College.

Friday's opening bids were $125,000 below previous estimates with Heinz Construction, Inc., submitting a low bid of $1.174 million for construction costs.

Original construction costs, including administration and architectural fees, were estimated at about $2 million.

Scholarships awarded

By Gire and Vercellono

Two Parkland advertising students were named recipients of scholarships awarded by the Ad Club of Champaign-Urbana.

The students, Michelle Anderson and Eric Bohlen, received the $400 awards at the Round Barn Convention Centre Oct. 20. They were chosen to receive two out of the four scholarships given annually by the club. Other winners were Kim Beavers and Yvonne Winans, both from the U of I.

This year, seventeen students applied for the scholarships. Of these, five attend Parkland. The award is presented on the basis of personal interviews and letters of application. Since 1979, at least one of the winners has been a student at Parkland.

Bohlen, 19, is a graduate of Centennial High School, Champaign. He learned about the scholarships from Ronald E. Taylor, his advertising instructor.

"First we had to submit a resume and a letter telling why we were wanted the scholarship," Bohlen explained.

"We then had to set up a time for an interview with the selection committee," he continued.

The committee was composed of Taylor; Gordon White, professor of advertising at U of I, and Mark Krueger of J. M. Jones.

When asked what he did with the winnings, Bohlen replied, "I put them in the bank to await next semester's bills."

Bohlen is a full-time student, scheduled for graduation in May. He hopes to work in advertising copywriting after graduation.

Anderson was unavailable for comment.

Students visit prison

Tuesday, Oct. 12, Parkland's Sociological Association spent the day touring the Stateville Correctional Facility in an effort to expand their knowledge of social programs dealing with criminal reform.

The group, whose members' interests range from child care to politics, decided to take personal tours as opposed to guest speakers in order to observe reform programs in progress and thereby evaluate the results.

Students continue to express concern on SSS

Dear Sir,
To continue the debate of whether to or not to register for the draft let me share with you a recent experience that I had.
In a letter I received last week from Henry N. Williams of the Selective Service System, Mr. Williams informs me that he has received information that I have not registered as required by law. He also informed me that I should fill out an enclosed form that would first, register me, second, inform them why I could not register, and finally, whether I am of the age required to register. Failure to respond in 15 days would result in my name being forwarded to the Justice Department for investigation by the F.B.I. In response to him, I first refused to comply with his requests, second, urged him to report me to the Department of Justice for investigation by the Federal Bureau of Intimidation, and finally, to continue to urge my fellow Americans to resist Selective Service registration and to aid and abet in this resistance. This will assure that we will not be used for corporate profit as the more than 50,000 men who died in Vietnam were used. We will not be misled by men who wrap themselves in our flag to hide the blood they spill as they futilely attempt to halt liberation struggles worldwide. We will not allow the rich minority to consume the poor majority to satisfy their greed. We will resist and we will win.

Sincerely,
Joseph J. Parnaruskis

opinions

'Student has a lot to learn'

Dear Editor:
This letter is in regard to the Oct. 13 letter to the editor that brutally crucified the Parkland Christian Fellowship and their article in the Prospectus Oct. 6. Being the Inner Organizational Council vice-president, I feel that my duty obligates me to fight in defense of all my organizations and in this situation I can clearly see that the Oct. 13 letter signed "student" should not have even been submitted in the paper.

"Student" felt subject matter was repulsive. Granted Tom McCowan could have been more conservative on word usage, but if "student" feels that everyday human occurrences are vile, maybe "student" should become a hermit, living on his own without the benefits of public interactions.

"Student" further took it upon himself to read between the lines and translate the statements made by Mr. Tom McCowan. To sum it all up "student" also took it upon himself to sum up the beliefs of the whole Christian Association as a whole and crucify them without a trial.

I personally have sat in on a few of their meetings, as I have with many of my other organizations. I find the members of Parkland Christian Fellowship very intelligent and dignified people, who are not at all like the people described in the "student" article.

There is one thing in the Oct. 13 letter to the Editor I fully agree with, the author signed it "student". This person does in fact have a lot to learn.

Ed Young, I.O.C. Vice President

Voter participation urged

To the Editor:
Democracy is not a spectacular sport. Indeed, it requires considerable effort on the part of the citizens to cast an informed vote. Many candidates are working long hours to let you know their opinions on important issues. Those elected will decide policy affecting your pocketbook and the quality of life in our community. Recent voter turnout in Champaign County has been substantially less than admirable. This election, make sure the informed voice of Champaign County is heard! (If you don't vote, who will?)

TV spots offer tips

In a series of public service announcements to be aired over WCIA and WICD starting today, Champaign police officers will offer safety tips and general precautions to Halloween trick-or-treaters.

According to a spokesman for the police department, the officers will tape spots in an effort to warn unsuspecting youngsters and parents to be cautious next weekend.

"We don't want to overly frighten anybody but because of the (tainted) Tylenol, we want to get these extra precautions out to the public," Gary Spear of the Champaign police crime analysis unit said.

ISA serves Parkland's international students

by Rosalind Weber

The International Student Association has been in existence at Parkland College since 1978. Linda Van Roosendaal, an instructor of English as a Second Language at Parkland is advisor for the organization.

Van Roosendaal said that funding for the International Student Association comes from student activities as well as student run activities such as bake sales. The advisor said that countries represented in the student association are from the orient, (Korea, Taiwan and Mainland China), South America (Columbia and Venezuela) and Vietnam and Iran.

Current membership in the association is around 20.

Activities of ISA include parties and outings, which give people from different parts of the world the opportunity to get to know each other.

Questions to readers get varied responses

We asked Parkland students if they read the Prospectus and if so, what their favorite feature is.

Richard Furr

"I read the Prospectus the day it comes out, and I like the sports page, but I think the paper needs to be bigger. It should have longer and more articles for Sports. The articles in the front of the paper are long, but on the sports page there is usually a picture and who it is of, but it does not give results."

Linda Hunter

"I'll glance through it and if something looks interesting, I read it. I do look through it every week, though. I like the things that tell about what's happening at Parkland and the features on different towns. I'm not too interested in sports so I don't read that page."

Janice Young

"Probably the headlines, or whatever's on the front page and sticks out. I don't really have any favorite feature, I just go through and read."

Linda Papenbrok

"I read every issue, I like the reviews, especially the TV reviews. It's interesting to get another person's opinion on something. I look through the classifieds, too. Some of the personals are kind of funny."

Jeff Starwalt

"I don't read every issue of the Prospectus, but probably every other one. I read it just for general information, not for any particular outstanding feature. The news is somewhat dated since it is only a weekly."

cility, located near Joliet, is a maximum security institution that presently houses 2,200 all-male inmates convicted of Class 4 felonies.

Within its walls are 64 acres of land beautifully maintained by the inmates. A small farm outside the confine is cared for by a select group of trustees.

Correctional Officer Gilbert Romero, a 7-year veteran, led the tour, highlighting the general facility rooms, the gymnasiums, and the classrooms.

A quarter of Stateville's population attends classes in technical vocations. A sample of classes includes tailoring, furniture repair, farming and mechanics. Recent budget cuts have eliminated funds for the barber school.

Budget cuts have also contributed to the increased use of inmates for menial tasks that were previously handled by Stateville's staff. Additional responsibilities placed on the staff themselves has caused an increase in job stress but, says Romero, it's not too stressful yet. If the cuts continue, however, the burn-out rate will increase.

Romero explained to the group the institution's use of the gymnasiums for therapeutic rehabilitation. The gym serves as a viable asset in releasing frustrations that result from an array of past and present experiences.

Some of the major problems within Stateville are the gang-wars and homosexual assaults. Many newcomers are subject to homosexual acts and other forms of abuse. The staff is attempting to curb such assaults by convincing these gangs that their strength lies in cooperation, rather than destruction. So far two of the gangs have adopted this tactic. Peer pressure is very influential in an environment such as Stateville's.

The inmates are normally allowed to roam throughout designated areas within the facility and the presence of the visiting group did not affect this activity. Their basic attire is blue jeans and a work shirt so the Sociological Association members were required to dress in clothes other than jeans, thereby eliminating any possibilities for confusions. A nametag placed on each visiting member was the only other identifying characteristic that separated them from the residents.

One of the members of the Sociological Association had an opportunity to talk with some of the inmates and found that, in general, there were no hard feelings towards the guards or the institution. Many said they truly regretted the actions that placed them there. The toughest times, they said, are during visitation. No physical contact is allowed when family and friends come to visit. This is especially difficult for the inmates with children. "If you're lucky," said one, "you can get a squeeze in. But if they catch you, that's it. The visit's over."

At the end of the tour the members of the Sociological Association took time to reflect on what they had witnessed. Many were awed by both the concept of confinement and the freedom within it. Others were "jealous" of some of the privileges such as HBO, free education, and varied activities.

Basically, they said, the atmosphere at Stateville was calm. The correctional officers, armed with pencil and pad only, command respect from the inmates with relative ease. The inmates, as observed by the group, were obviously aware of the benefits of good behavior.

The Sociological Association plans to investigate other institutions that deal with mental, juvenile, and other social programs in the near future. They extend an open invitation to any interested parties who would like to join them in these visits.

Cost of alcoholism is high

Approximately 5 million people in the U.S. are alcoholics, and the annual cost of alcoholism is over $15 billion. A new, six-week Parkland College course, "Alcohol Use and Abuse in American Society," will explore the individual social and economic problems caused by alcoholism. The class will meet from 7-9:15 p.m. on Wednesdays, October 27-December 8, at the College.

This course is designed for families of alcoholics, as well as people in human service professions, such as probation workers, police and correctional officers, nurses, social workers, clergy and educators. The course has been approved by the Illinois Alcoholism Counselor Certification Board for 13 hours of Category I continuing education.

Though alcoholism affects family life, behavior and work patterns, many functional alcoholics are able to hide their alcoholism. This course will focus on the functional alcoholic and effects on family.

Tuition for this one credit hour course is $17. Those interested may register by mail, or in person at the College from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., Monday-Friday. On October 20 and 21, there will be a special evening registration period from 5-8 p.m. at the admissions office. Late registration, from October 22-29, is permitted, but a late fee will be charged. Students who wish to register by mail should request mail registration materials from the admissions office, or use the forms included in the Fall Timetable.

Harried by hoards of homework? Stupified by seemingly ceaseless studying? Well, here's a little "mind candy" that won't hurt your work-weary brain or your grade average.

This Find-A-Word puzzle contains 44 things found at Parkland, as well as, believe it or not 25 bonus words! The bonus words are things that may or may not be found at Parkland.

The 44 Parkland words are listed for you, but you're on your own for the bonus words.

The words run horizontally, diagonally, vertically, backwards, and yes, some words do intersect with other words.

If you find all 44 Parkland words and all 25 bonus words in 15 minutes or less, go to the head of the class.

Ghoulies and ghosties go 'bump' in the night

by Albert Sapp

The night of October 31 will see our neighborhood streets populated with just about any type of creature you could care to imagine. They will range from the newest outer space alien to the traditional witches of old. Monsters and clowns will greet us at the door with yells of "Trick or Treat!"

Children with painted faces and brightly colored costumes will be gathering together in homes to dunk for apples, play games, and exchange their favorite ghost stories. Movie theatres will try to scare their audiences with the most frightening tales of terror they can find on film.

All the above images are familiar to us from our childhood and have been familiar for many generations. The history of the holiday we call Halloween goes back to a time before the Romans conquered the British Isles.

Halloween was originally celebrated by the Druids of Celtic communities in northern and western Europe, especially Ireland and Scotland. The holiday was celebrated with feasting and festival, marking the beginning of a new year. Food for the feast came from supplies set aside for the winter months. The Druids would perform joint rites for both the sun god and the lord of the dead. It is from these rites for the lord of the dead that the idea of creatures wandering the countryside at night arose.

From the rites for the sun god came the tradition of handing out nuts and fruits. The harvest had been completed and the sun god was thanked for his gifts toward the coming battle against the blight of the winter.

Sacrifices were made upon this eve as well and were continued for some time, even after Christianity came to the land. The incorporation of this holiday into the Christian calendar did not take place till Pope Gregory IV placed All Saints' Day, November 1, on the church calendar.

Rome tried to change the nature of the celebration into a more solemn event by increasing the number of masses celebrated that eve. The church hoped to offset the pagan festive rites that were still being carried on.

Perhaps in reaction to this attempt to change the nature of Halloween, witchcraft cults in the Middle Ages picked All Hallows' Eve, as it is also known, as one of its most important masses for Satan. The figure of the witch upon her broomstick with her black cat arose from tales about what happens upon this night. Although the belief in witchcraft has decreased in modern times, many of the symbols associated with this holiday have their roots in the past.

Halloween has, in the U.S., returned to just an occasion for merrymaking.

Still, as you walk or drive home from that party on All Hallows' Eve, don't be surprised if you find yourself looking a little closely at that shadow behind a tree.

If a shiver flows up your spine as the clouds sweep across the bright lit face of the moon, it's only the wind that carries the chill. Or is it?

Have a good time this Halloween, but make it a safe one too. The parties will be fun, but we'd like to have you around afterwards. See you next week.

'Halloween' chills

by Brian Lindstrand

When the film "Halloween" first came out, critics acclaimed director John Carpenter to be the heir to the throne of Alfred Hitchcock for his brilliant technique in the making of what was essentially a run-of-the-mill schlock horror film.

"Halloween went on to become the highest box-office money maker of the independent film variety.

In October of 1981 came the inevitable sequel. "Halloween II" was vastly inferior to the original film, because of its dependence on gore instead of suspense.

Now comes "Halloween III: Season of the Witch," a film which tries to please the audiences that made "Halloween I & II" such hits while going for more suspense than gore and trying to construct a more cerebral thriller than the first two films.

To begin with, "Halloween III" has nothing to do with the first two movies. It represents an attempt on the behalf of producers John Caprenter and Debra Hill to do a totally original film.

Halloween mask-maker Cochran (Dan O'Herlihy) is in actuality a practitioner of witchcraft and he has become upset with the commercialization of Halloween and wants to return it to the days of old when Halloween was known as All Hallow's Eve, and "the hills ran red with the blood of animals and children."

Cochran has manufactured a trio of masks called, interestingly enough, "the Halloween III" (a skull, jack o'lantern, and a witch). Each mask has been fitted with a special micro-circuit which will receive a special signal. The signal will do rather nasty things to the wearer (two examples are shown in the movie, but due to lack of space, and lack of the proper words to describe them, I will not go into it here).

Inside the micro-circuitry is a fragment from one of the giant rock slabs of Stonehenge, which Cochran says contains a great power. Our hero is one Dr. Challis (Tom Atkins) who investigates the death of one of his patients, a toy store owner who discovered the plot behind the masks. Challis meets the store owner's daughter, Ellie, (Stacey Nelkins) and they set out to find out why her father was killed.

As I stated before, "Halloween III" attempts to appeal to the audience that made the first two films a success while trying to create a more suspenseful thriller in the mode of Alfred Hitchcock.

For starters, first-time director/writer Tommy Lee Wallace is no Hitchcock. He's not even a Carpenter. Wallace and the cast start out with the best intentions, and yes, the film does have some redeeming qualities, but at times, Wallace finds it necessary to bring on the gore, so the make-up technicians can show why they were put on the film crew.

"Halloween III" also had some redeeming features in the area of its performances. Atkins and Nelkins do well in their roles and actually form an interesting chemistry on screen, but it is Dan O'Herlihy who steals the show. His Cochran is menacing in a quiet, calm way, which makes him all the more menacing. Also, the musical score by John Carpenter and Alan Howarth is quite memorable.

"Halloween III: Season of the Witch" is not a terrible movie; however, it is far from a great one either. If Universal studios has its way, we will be able to see a "Halloween" film every year. A hint to Mr. Carpenter, Miss Hill, and Mr. Wallace: please try to create a film which is less gory than the three so far, and try to bring back the superb suspense of the original film.

'Year' a bright note in a dull fall

by Albert Sapp

"My Favorite Year," a new comedy from MGM, has joined some of the summer holdovers to brighten up what has been, so far, a rather dull fall movie season. It opened just recently at the Country Fair Theatres and proved to be a very delightful way to spend an hour and a half.

The movie is rated PG, but it doesn't seem to have that much in it to really deserve the rating when compared to some of the others that have received the same rating. They captured me right off with the gentle strains of "Stardust", sung by Nat King Cole, as they scan the skyline of old New York.

"My Favorite Year" is set in 1954 New York during the heyday of television's beginning. This was the time, when tv was live and you didn't get a second shot at any mistakes you might make.

Stan 'King' Kaiser (Joseph Bologna) decides to have a famous screen actor appear on his show and hooks Alan Swann (Peter O'Toole) as the guest.

Alan has an avid supporter on the writing staff in the person of Benjy Stone (Mark Linn-Baker). Benjy thinks the idea is fantastic, but the head writer of the show (Bill Macy) isn't quite so sure about it. His apprehension and King's are increased, when Swann shows up plastered to the ears.

Benjy's faith in his hero isn't really shaken, so King puts him in charge of keeping Swann sober and on time for rehearsals. King gives him some added incentive to accomplish this by telling him that, if he doesn't do it, he will lose his job.

Benjy gets some help from Swann's driver, but it takes all they have to keep up with Swann. To make matters worse for Benjy is the fact that he is trying to get things together with executive assistant, K. C. Downing (Jessica Harper).

Benjy takes Swann out to meet his family one night and becomes slightly embarrassed at the way they act. Benjy's Uncle Morty meets them first and escorts them into the apartment where we meet his step-father. Benjy's mom now makes her appearance, looking like she was attending a Hollywood premier and dressed for it too.

Laine Kazan does an excellent job as the mother, an overprotective Jewish housewife, and makes a play for Swann as soon as she meets him.

This movie isn't all comedy. There are some sentimental moments and dramatic moments too, such as Swann trying to see his daughter and coming to the rescue of King when he is attacked by gangsters.

The movie is a delightfully nostalgic look at the past of television and old style comedy.

I think you'll like this one, if for nothing else than to see Peter O'Toole in a very skilled performance.

Peter O'Toole swashbuckles his way through "My Favorite Year."

Test your wits!

by Brian Lindstrand and Albert Sapp

Join us in testing your movie knowledge of both the past and today. We've collected some questions from a number of different sources and we'll provide the answers for you in next week's edition. This is just for fun, so enjoy yourself and see how well you do.

1. Name the recent movie from which the accompanying photo is taken. (Hint: It was the story of a real person who gained notoriety from something he did concerning an airplane.)
2. "Echoes of a Summer," "Bugsy Malone," and "The Little Girl Who Lived Down the Lane" are only a few of the movies done by this young actress. Her most famous role was opposite Robert DeNiro. Who is she?
3. Pia Zadora made her acting debut (as a child) in what 1964 film?
4. The role of Rooster Cogburn won this actor his only Academy Award for Best Actor. Who was he?
5. In what 1957 film did Harpo Marx play Sir Isaac Newton?
6. What actress from "Star Trek" is currently employed by NASA as a spokeswoman and what role did she play in "Star Trek"?
7. What famed Western star played Genghis Khan in "The Conqueror" (1955)?
8. The Enterprise from "Star Trek" was a heavy-cruiser of what ship class? Also, what was its (Enterprise) hull number?
9. Name the 1978 film which featured the hit song, "Puberty Love."
10. Carrie Fisher played Princess Leia in "Star Wars," but she previously played a teenager hot after Warren Beatty in what movie?
11. What film was Burt Reynolds' first musical? (Hint: It was not "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas.")
12. Can you name the actors and actresses who played the following in "Battlestar Galactica": Cdr. Adama, Apollo, Starbuck, Casseopia, and Sheba?
13. Who played the creature in the original "The Thing"?
14. What was the name of the robot in "Forbidden Planet"?
15. Who played Dr. Frank N. Furter in "The Rocky Horror Picture Show"?
16. What were the names of Spock's bride-to-be and the official who was to preside over the wedding? Also, why did Kirk admire this official so much?
17. What was the only film to win Henry Fonda his one Best Actor Oscar?
18. What was the name for the supreme level of logic that Spock was trying to achieve in the first "Star Trek" movie?
19. What was William Holden's last film?
20. What was Peter Seller's last film?

I'm here in corn country, and I think I can stump all you mental midgets with my witty, brilliant, etc., etc. sports trivia questions. If you can answer them all, you're either cheating, or you're pretty bright.

The same prize is awarded to the winner, and the rules are simple. Have the answers on a piece of notepaper on my desk in the Prospectus office by Friday morning at 11:00, and make sure your answers are written legibly.

In the event of ties, the winner will be drawn from a hat containing the winning entries. All results will be final. The drawing will be held on Friday afternoons at 1:15 by the Sports Editor.

Here's this week quiz, go ahead and knock your silly little brains out Sportsfans.

Team is promising

by Monica Culpepper

Whether it is the thought of practicing in Illinois's cold weather or just a lack of interest, Parkland's women's track team is still a little shorthanded this year. Despite efforts to recruit members, sign-ups since the beginning of the semester is at 10-12 members. Although this number is higher than last year's women's team of five members, it is still not as large as hoped for by Athletic Director Joe Abbey. "Thirty girls would be the biggest squad in Illinois, the more the better because then we could enter two or three in an event."

According to Abbey, there are still some very qualified women who are not signed up. "They're just not coming out. I could name several girls not on the team who could leave here on full scholarship, room, board and everything."

Abbey is still hopeful that more will sign up before the January track meets, but time is running out. Meets may not start until January, but there is still training.

Even with the low turnout, Abbey says the team looks really promising, and he is confident they will do well this year. "We had only five girls on the team last year, and we finished ninth in the nation."

Is fan participation dead?

by John Hebert

Is fan participation dead here at Parkland? I've attended a few of the athletic events here in the last month and noticed a lack of student support. At a home game for the Women's Volleyball team a few weeks ago, there were very few students present to root for the girls.

Now I know some of you are going to say women's volleyball is not one of the more popular sports. But we're talking about a team that is nationally ranked and should be a strong contender for the national championship.

But Volleyball is not the only sport suffering from lack of attendance. How many fans attended the Parkland Invitational Cross-country meet to cheer the Parkland runners? Not too many.

I understand this is Illini country and the football season is upon us, but dammit, you attend Parkland College, and Parkland deserves your loyalty and support!

Jan Alexander wrote an Parkland cross country runner Robert Sadler

excellent article for the Prospectus on Sept. 15. Maybe we spend too much time identifying with the Blue and Orange of UI.

There are a lot of reasons as to why all of us are not attending the U of I, and they are all valid, whether it's money, or grades, or in my case, I just didn't arrive in Illinois in time to apply.

We may all want to attend the U of I, but we attend Parkland. And if you remember the old Beach Boys tune, the title says it all: "Be True to Your School."

Granted, Parkland does not have the captive audience that a four year school has, namely the students that reside on campus, but we should be able to provide a little more support for our athletic teams.

If a lack of publicity is the problem, then in the Prospectus, starting this week, a schedule of weekly sports will be published.

Parkland athletes deserve our support. They train hard, practice and compete in the name of our, that's right, our school.

Don't you think we can pay back some of the loyalty that the athletes display every day, by attending a few of the athletic events and giving them our support?

Fast Freddy

Due to a mix-up in the Fast Freddy line-up last week, the tie-breaker was listed incorrectly.

A drawing was made of all the winners in the Prospectus office by a disinterested party and Kevin Barlow's name was pulled out of the hat.

Kevin, make sure to stop by X153 to pick up your prize. Other names that picked the right combination were Dave Staebler, C. Tom Harriman, Dan Anderson, Dick Taylor, K. Rogers, and Sandra Bailey.

Due to Notre Dame and Oregon's tie game, both the tie-breaker and the Notre Dame game were thrown out.

Any questions may be presented to the Sports Editor Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, 11-12, or 1-3 in the Prospectus office.

For the first time in fifteen years, the St. Louis Cardinals are the World Champions of Baseball. The Cards beat the Milwaukee Brewers 4-3 in a closely contested series. Catcher Darrel Porter was named the series MVP.

The Parkland women's volleyball team travels to St. Louis this week to compete in the St. Louis Tournament there.

The Lady Cobras are one of the favorites going into the tournament on the strength of their 20-1 record.
