ANNUAL MEETING

October 29, 1923

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY

In reviewing the record of events during a twelve month as submitted to our committee, it is our good fortune to observe only the pleasant things of the passing days. The year has come and gone in its usual even tide from month to month and thus perplexities are reduced and problems solved in easy stages. Our story from year to year is much the same to casual observers for it can never be summarized except in merest outline.

Let me mention first the cordial warm atmosphere of the home life as evidenced this year when the new student nurses were given an out-of-door welcoming party as new comers. As an occasion for cultivating comradeship Hallowe'en is never forgotten and this year it was not behind other years in originality of observance. The Christmas season was kept at its usual high mark with a tree in every ward and gifts to every patient. At 5:30 in the morning the nurses assembled and started on their visits to the wards singing the familiar and much-loved carols. A new feature was Santa Claus appearing among them bearing a gift to every child greatly to the delight of each. On the Sunday afternoon preceding Christmas the boy choir of St. Thomas's Church visited the wards and sung their carols, and received warm thanks, to which we add our own at this late day. The nurses enjoyed a Christmas party too, through the thoughtfulness and generosity of their friends who engaged a professional magician for their entertainment.

The largest number of student nurses in any month is sixty-seven. The entering class of twenty-eight will raise the number to a more normal figure. The renewing or remaking of the wards adds to the comfort of the nurses as well as to that of the patients. A nurse from St. Luke's Hospital with nearly two years' training has entered our school and is allowed one year's credit. A nurse sent to Gaylord Farm Sanatorium has recovered and re-entered the school this year. Twelve nurses from other Training Schools have sought affiliated service and upon completion of the term of affiliation expressed their appreciation of the privilege of spending the time in a larger hospital, seeing and learning new methods and broadening their training. Three nurses have been visited with great sorrow during the year. To them we wish to accord our deepest sympathy.

We follow with interest the members of the office staff as they have retired from their official positions. Miss Grindy, as practical instructor, resigned in April. Having held the position for three years, she felt the need of rest. Later she will enter Columbia University. Miss Given resigned as theoretical instructor in August to take a course in Columbia. Miss Girardot, assistant, returned to France, her home country. Miss Stone, second assistant, is in New York, and is enjoying her work as private duty nurse. We are grateful for the labors of these good stewards of the grace of cheerful service. It is a cause of satisfaction that Miss Tarbox "tarrieth by the stuff." To Dean Goodrich and her associates-elect we have only cordial words of welcome. The chairman of our executive committee, Mrs. Bumstead, resigned in June. With her daughter she is going abroad for this coming year. Her resignation was accepted with grateful acknowledgment of her long period of service in office. We wish her "Bon Voyage."

Three State Nursing Organizations held an annual meeting with the Waterbury hospital in January. Among the speakers secured for the occasion were Professor Winslow of Yale, Miss Burgess of Columbia, Miss DeWitt and Miss Roberts, co-editors of the American Journal of Nursing, and Miss Gilman, secretary of the New York State Board of Examiners. The staff of the Waterbury hospital spared no pains or expense for the comfort of their guests.

Miss Martha Eakins, School Inspector from the University of the State of New York, spent a day here making a careful survey of all our records, and of the curriculum, Nurses Home, and Hospital and gave some helpful suggestions. Her report was received later and her criticisms were acknowledged to be well taken.

Miss Mary E. Scranton's legacy of $56,700 has been received, and we are notified of a legacy of $1,000 from Mrs. Sarah M. B. Deane and of $5,000 from Miss Martha Day Porter.

The Board has held nine regular meetings and two special meetings. At the April meeting, following a report upon the subject, the pledge was given of hearty co-operation with the Visiting Nurse Association and Yale University in establishing a Yale School of Nursing. Later the chairman of the Connecticut Training School Board was authorized to sign a proposed contract respecting the relations of the parties to the New School of Nursing of Yale University and the professors, instructors and students thereof.

For convenience, the usual class festivities were advanced one week. The prospective graduates were honored by the class of 1924 with a promenade on the evening of May 11th. The day following was free and a class picnic was arranged with a theatre party in the evening.

The week itself opened with the Baccalaureate sermon preached by Dr. Maurer in Center Church Sunday afternoon. "Not to be Ministered Unto but to Minister" was his theme, a whole sermon in a text. The class song was rendered as a part of the service.

We cannot approach the recital of the great event of the year, the celebration of the semi-centennial of this school, the Connecticut Training School for Nurses, without thinking backward. We pause for a moment to accord due reverence to the memory of the twenty-two men and women who fifty years ago secured from the state the Act of Incorporation. Mrs. Heman B. Allen is the one member of this company now living. We honor by name its first officers: Mrs. Noah Porter, president; Mrs. Francis Bacon, secretary, followed almost immediately by Miss Emily Betts, in office twenty-seven years; Hon. Morris Tyler and Mr. Samuel Hemingway, treasurers; Mrs. T. W. T. Curtis, a loyal member of the committee through all the changes of all the years, her wise counsel and her presence in our meetings being as a strong tower, now for five years a memory.

The first number on the program of the celebration was the registration of visiting alumnae at the Home for Nurses in the Hospital compound. Two hundred and seventy-seven is the number recorded, but it is believed that many more were present who did not give their names not recognizing its importance or finding it inconvenient, possibly not being able to stay but a very short time. Four hundred is thought to be more nearly the full number.

The graduates were received in the audience room of the Chapel by Miss Abbie Maude Gilbert, class of 1911, president of the Alumnae Association. Miss Gilbert presided at the formal meeting which followed. She introduced a representative of each class who was called upon for a three minute speech. Forty-three classes responded. The five classes not represented were heard from by letter or otherwise. The first class numbered four and the only member now living was present and was welcomed with the honor due her seniority. The hospital made this large company its guests and served buffet luncheon which was enjoyed to the full.

The next event was an Afternoon Tea given the graduating class and the long line of their predecessors by Prof. Farnam, president, at his home. Every one availed herself of the cordial invitation given by Mr. and Mrs. Farnam and the hour was spent in delightful exchange of greetings and talk of past experiences. The receiving line included four nurses dressed in the uniform worn during four periods of the school's history.

In the evening the company with their distinguished guests assembled at the Country Club around attractive tables, only limited in number of seats by the capacity of the room. After the dinner Prof. Farnam, at the head of the table, introduced Charles-Edward Amory Winslow, Professor of Public Health, Yale University, as toastmaster. Prof. Winslow in taking the chair made it the occasion to testify that he had not found his environment in New Haven and Connecticut slow and too conservative as he had been forewarned. Yale had disproved this. He introduced Haven Emerson, Professor of Public Health Administration, Columbia University. Prof. Emerson's subject was: "The Rôle of Nursing in the Public Health Program." He made it a strong point that in any program of public health urged for the child the parent should be included. He warned nurses to take no position they were not trained to fill. "Be mistress of your own profession" is his advice to-day and is easily remembered.

Willard Cole Rappleye, M.D., Superintendent of the New Haven General Hospital, spoke on "Medicine and Nursing Education." His optimistic vision looks forward to the time when a group of leaders in the medical and nursing professions will not only participate in broad social and community policies in regard to health, but will be able to shape and guide them.

Miss Annie Warburton Goodrich, Assistant Professor of Nursing Teachers' College, Columbia University, and Director of Nurses, Visiting Nurse Service, Henry Street Settlement, was the next speaker, her subject being: "An Experiment in Nursing Education." Miss Goodrich spoke of the new era in the history of nursing marked by the Yale School of Nursing, the celebration of this fiftieth anniversary bringing in review a period characterized by her as "one of unprecedented growth and splendid achievement." We were told that in this comparatively short time fifteen hundred schools have been established which it is estimated have graduated fifteen thousand nurses. This large service had made possible the care of the sick in institutions and homes to a wide extent, giving them the type of care most needed. Miss Goodrich called attention to the fact that standards have been raised, and the curriculum enriched through nursing education. In conclusion she said: "The School of Nursing at Yale is unique, in that it makes possible under conditions that nowhere else exist, experimentation in every branch of the undergraduate and graduate work in order that a program of education may be evolved that will make as important contribution to the field of preventive medicine as did the earlier school of nursing to curative medicine."

"The University and Nursing" was the subject of James Rowland Angell, President of Yale University. He was too ill to be present. George Parmly Day, Treasurer, spoke for him very briefly, giving the assurance of the hearty co-operation of Yale with the New School of Nursing bearing its name.

Mr. Farnam announced that Miss Rachel Bailey, Northampton, Mass., class of 1875, was present and as a graduate represented the first and oldest class, and that Bernice Ballentine, 1904, now Mrs. Colwell of India, is the long distance graduate.

The registration of nurses continued Wednesday morning and we learn that a study of the lists of fifty years resulted in a revelation of facts of great interest. Nine hundred and twenty-seven have graduated. Of this number one hundred and five have died. Two hundred and forty-seven have held institutional positions, thirty-seven of these being superintendents of nurses. One hundred and sixty-two have married. One hundred and six have been public health nurses; thirteen Spanish War nurses, thirty-seven World War nurses, two missionaries abroad. Seventy have taken post graduate courses.

The General Meeting was called in Sprague Hall as Gifford Chapel proved too small—Abbie Elizabeth Bigelow, 1905, Superintendent Visiting Nurse Association, Meriden, and President, Graduate Nurse Association of Connecticut, presiding. She introduced Emma Leslie Stowe, for eleven years superintendent of the Connecticut Training School for Nurses. When Miss Stowe arose and addressed her audience as "graduates and their friends," she was greeted with a welcoming sound of hand-clapping and with a becoming bunch of wonderful roses. Her subject was "The Relation of the Training School to the Private Duty Nurse." Miss Stowe's talk assumed a very familiar tone for she had seen in that large audience so many who were under her supervision in training and memories were so astir. It was most natural to hear her say that her interest in nurses and their problems continues real and steadfast. She recognized the chief factor in the relationship between nurses and training school to be supervision, defining this relationship more closely by the words, maternal, always interested, protective, helpful. "Many avenues are now open," she said, "for special training for nurses. Along some of these lines there should be seen greater preparation for the private duty nurse. Let us hope some one will be given a vision to see clearly how it can be effected." To the nurses she said: "One lesson I would give you for every day: Live up to your ideals, your reward is in the happiness of service."

"The Value of Nursing Organization" was presented by Alice Shepard Gilman, Secretary of the State Board of Nurse Examiners. She made it very plain that organization was valuable in giving the opportunity to discuss knotty problems that arise in different situations in the nursing field, to confer frankly upon simpler questions, to study means of general advancement, and to help maintain a standard of excellence in all respects.

"The Old Clinic and the New," Ella Phillips Crandall, Assistant General Director American Child Health Association. Miss Crandall traced the history of the Association up to the present time. She made an appeal for patients in the dispensary. She recommended that business appointments be made to obviate the long period of waiting that had been customary. She looked forward to the day when children in their earliest years shall know health rules as their history and arithmetic so that obedience to such rules will be automatic.

Luncheon was served at the New Haven Lawn Club, Mrs. Henry Andrew Bumstead, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Connecticut Training School for Nurses, presiding. A table was reserved for the graduating class who were invited guests of the committee. Mrs. Bumstead announced a gift of $1,000 to the Alumnae Fund from Mrs. Kingsbury of Waterbury. This announcement met with loud applause.

She then introduced Mary Grace Hills, Superintendent of the New Haven Visiting Nurse Association, who was received with great cordiality, an evidence that her good work is well known. "The Nurse and Community Health" was her subject. She honored Mrs. Theodore T. Munger, Mrs. Thomas G. Bennett and Miss Lillian E. Prudden as incorporators of the local association in January, 1895, and called attention to their choice of the emblem, the Maltese cross. She recognized the co-operation of our schools telling us that one hundred and seven of our student nurses have aided in their service, many of these returning later to graduate. Twenty-two Connecticut Training School nurses have taken their course in Public Health Nursing and of their present staff of fifty-one, thirteen are Connecticut Training School graduates, a total of one hundred and sixty-four graduates and students who have worn their uniform, grey and white, as well as our blue and white.

"Evolution of Public Health Nursing," Mary Beard, Director of Instructive District Nurse Association, Boston. Miss Beard began with speaking of days when books were little used in training. She said: "We wished to learn about pneumonia because we had patients with that disease; likewise by taking temperatures we became interested to learn what the pulse signified." Miss Beard advised young women not to enter upon any course of nursing unless they liked people. She quoted Dr. Emerson as saying seventy-five per cent of poverty is due to disease.

"Future of Public Health Nursing," Mary Sewall Gardner,

Director of the District Nurse Association, Providence. Miss Gardner is looking forward to the time when there shall be fewer nurses in her city rather than more. District Nursing began with three nurses. In twenty years there were sixty. She anticipated the time when the number will return to a few for the reason that the community will be in normal health and thus nurses will not be needed.

"Evolution of the Training School from a Hospital School to a University School of Nursing," Mary Adelaide Nutting, Director of the Department of Nursing and Health, Teachers' College, Columbia University. Miss Nutting traced the history of nurse training, naming three periods, the first of service only, the attempt to meet the demands of the hospitals which were very great, with no time for education. In the second period, nurses went to the homes. The third period was one of educational advance. She rejoiced in what Yale is doing for educational advancement.

In the remaining hours of the afternoon opportunity was given for inspection of the Hospital.

The Commencement exercises for the class of 1923 were held in Sprague Memorial Hall which was filled to its capacity. Seats were reserved for graduates and other guests. Prof. Farnam, President, was in the chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. Wm. Beardsley, D.D. The speakers were Dean Winternitz, Yale Medical School, Margaret Katharine Stack, class of 1905, Director of Public Health Nursing, State Department of Health, and President Mary Emma Woolley, Mount Holyoke College.

Dean Winternitz spoke upon "Medicine and Nursing." He made the statement that medicine and nursing are behind other branches of science, though a great advance is recognized. It may be a question whether modern medicine has not lost the human touch of the old family doctor. He knew his patients and their forbears and could give promise and assurance when needed. The specialist may not have time to give thought to the things beyond the work that engrosses him. While the hospital makes its appeal to the sick in many instances, there will always remain home cases and the need of house nursing.

Miss Stack, who was herself trained in our school, had the pleasure of studying its history, going back to those first years when everything was most primitive and when there was no precedent. The Connecticut Training School marked its own path. In that first year the number of nurses allowed by the Hospital was four, but a steady advance in number was shown in proportion to the growth and requirements of the hospital. During the tenth year twenty-three nurses were under instruction and rendering service. Miss Stack mentioned the "Handbook of Nursing" issued in the earlier years under the auspices of the executive committee and largely prepared by Mrs. Francis Bacon. It has been in great demand, and in a revised edition until within a few years, a royalty has been given by the publishers. The history as presented by Miss Stack was received with applause.

The subject of President Woolley's address was "The New Citizenship," and she carried her audience with her from the beginning to the end. President Woolley would naturally make much of education. "Good citizenship and education," she began, "are closely related. Truly the education of its citizens is the safeguard of a republic, and in this perplexing age the education of women acquires a new significance." It is not always realized how modern the educated woman is. In the whole history of womankind there have not been so momentous changes as have crowded into this last century. She classified the three periods of educational opportunities given to women—the first being from 1835 to 1875, the age of beginnings; the second from 1875 to 1915, the age of expansion; the third, the age in which we now live, which may be characterized later by the historian yet to be. She said, "Women have naturally much to give toward the making of the world that ought to be, and three characteristics are noticed that follow out this statement—sympathy with the constructive, a keen sense of the personal, and idealism. These qualities are worthy of wise leadership. It is true that more and more help must come from educated women. They give the vision and understanding and trained mind which are the object of education.

"Centuries like individuals have distinctive characteristics. What is the distinctive mission of the century whose first quarter we have almost completed? The problems of to-day, the problems of our own country and the world, depend for their solution upon the realization of the significance and application to human life of that little word 'inter.' Racial problems, industrial problems, class problems, will be solved only by a new inter-racial, inter-class spirit, only by a new international relationship." She earnestly wished that all might realize the responsibility for clear vision, strong purpose, high ideals; be quick to see and ready to meet the need of the world.

The presentation of diplomas by President Farnam to the class of 1923 was observed with unusual interest. It was the concluding ceremony of an unusual occasion.

To our generous speaker-guests who gave us so great visions of things that now are, and things that are to be, we give abounding thanks.

To our returning alumnae we would express our appreciation of their loyalty and good faith and successful endeavor and repeat the counsel ever before them in their insignia, to be "Always Ready."

To President Farnam, to Dr. Rappleye, to the Committee of Arrangements and their aides, whether men or means, we are deeply indebted for a royal good time.

We give grateful recognition of favors to all who at any time and all times have furthered the interests of The Connecticut Training School for Nurses.
