Course Description

This course offers an introduction to important themes in European Studies. The class examines Europe not only as a geographic region but also as an idea, both historically and in contemporary terms. The course provides an overview of the concept of Europe beginning with the ancient Greeks and Romans, the trajectory of the definition of Europe through history, and current issues related to defining what is European in terms of Europe as a region as well as principles, ideas, and practices around the world which can be traced to European culture. Readings and discussions concerning European identity through time will focus on different geographic regions and their histories and also offer attention to common denominators among those cultures which have articulated them as European. Presentations will include examples of art, architecture, music, and cultural artifacts that complement given themes and topics in the course. Analysis is also given to European inclusion and exclusion and how Europe has historically defined what is "not European" in light of such issues as race, religion, colonialism, and migration. Added focus will be devoted to the current Russian-Ukrainian conflicts and their background in European context.

Learning Outcomes

- Students will be able to recognize and identify attributes and characteristics common to European culture historically and in contemporary context.
- 2. Students will be able to define and identify terms, guiding ideas, movements, and trends which have connected and influenced time periods in European history and both individual and unified European cultures.
- 3. Students will become acquainted with particular regions and individual cultures which have historically been considered a part of broader European culture and understand the role each of those regions and cultures have played in the larger scope of European history and the construction of European identity.
- Students will be able to critically connect major developments and figures in European context with broader global ideas and movements.
- 5. Students will critically engage with the concept of Europe as an idea of inclusion as well as exclusion using examples highlighting such issues as race, religion, colonialism, and migration.
