Girls

HBO 8:00 p.m.

Hannah (Lena Dunham) and Adam (Adam Driver) discuss their future after a congratulatory dinner with her parents in this season premiere. Meanwhile, Marnie (Allison Williams) and Desi (Ebon Moss-Bachrach) face a distracted crowd at a downtown restaurant.

Episodes

SHOW 9:30 p.m.

Golden Globe winner Matt LeBlanc returns as a quirky version of himself in this season premiere. The comedy series follows a British couple who attempt to remake their popular British TV series over for American audiences with LeBlanc in the lead role.

Monday

The Celebrity Apprentice

5 7:00 p.m.

With one celebrity down and several more to go, Donald Trump puts the rest of the contestants to the test. Stars from the entertainment and sports world are challenged to raise money for charities of their choice in this unique reality TV series.

Major Crimes

TNT 8:00 p.m.

Billy Burke and Tuc Watkins guest star in this special two-part episode. When Phillip Stroh (Burke) serves as his own attorney, a judge (Watkins) helps him review his legal files. Mary McDonnell stars in this spin-off of "The Closer."

Castle

7 9:00 p.m.

Richard Castle (Nathan Fillion) is back as a newly minted private investigator in this new episode. Now, the competition between Castle and Beckett (Stana Katic) is on as she doubts he can solve a case before she and her team can.

Tuesday

Parks and Recreation

5 7:00 p.m.

Leslie Knope (Amy Poehler) and her Pawnee cohorts kick off the final season with back-to-back new episodes. The critically acclaimed series features an ensemble cast of eccentric characters who strive to make their small town a better place to live.

Marvel's Agent Carter

7 8:00 p.m.

In 1946, Peggy Carter (Hayley Atwell) risks being targeted as a traitor as she works to clear Howard Stark's (Dominic Cooper) name. Atwell first appeared as Agent Carter in the hit feature film "Marvel's Captain America: The First Avenger" (2011).

Face Off

SYFY 8:00 p.m.

In a new twist, former champions Rayce Bird, Anthony Kosar and Laura Tyler return to mentor three teams in this season premiere. The award-winning competition series follows talented special effects make-up artists vying for a shot at $100,000 and more.

Wednesday Criminal Minds

2 3 8:00 p.m.

Fugitives don't stand a chance with the FBI's Behavioral Analysis Unit on the case in this new episode. Led by founding member David Rossi (Joe Mantegna), the BAU members race to stop dangerous criminals in their tracks.

American Horror Story: Freak Show

FX 9:00 p.m.

The Twins (Sarah Paulson) receive some troubling information from Dandy (Finn Wittrock). Elsewhere, Maggie (Emma Roberts) is determined to prove her loyalty to Jimmy (Evan Peters), and the Freaks enforce their harsh notion of justice.

Broad City

COM 9:30 p.m.

Ilana (Ilana Glazer) sets out to find the perfect gift for Lincoln (Hannibal Buress) while Abbi (Abbi Jacobson) searches for an air conditioner in this season premiere. The series chronicles the antics of two twentysomethings living in New York City.

Thursday

WWE Smackdown!

SYFY 7:00 p.m.

The superstars of the WWE spark new rivalries and maintain long-standing feuds in two hours of all-new wrestling entertainment action. Some of the wrestlers featured in this WWE program include Big Show, Jack Swagger and Kelly Kelly.

Project Runway: All Stars

LIFE 8:00 p.m.

In this new episode of the all-star edition, the designers must use underwater marine life as inspiration. Find out which designer doubles the budget by swimming with the sharks. Alyssa Milano hosts this fashion competition series.

Elementary

2 3 9:00 p.m.

Sherlock Holmes (Jonny Lee Miller) uses his keen powers of observation to piece together another puzzling mystery. This modern-day take on the classic Sir Arthur Conan Doyle tale follows the famed detective as he cracks seemingly impossible cases.

Friday

Hawaii Five-0

2 3 8:00 p.m.

It may be January, but this crime drama heats up Friday night in a new episode of the reboot set in sunny Hawaii. Alex O'Loughlin stars as the newest incarnation of Det. Steve McGarrett, who leads a task force determined to wipe out crime.

12 Monkeys

SYFY 8:00 p.m.

Aaron Stanford stars as a time-traveler who sets out to stop the release of a deadly plague that will decimate the human race in this new drama. Based on Terry Gilliam's feature film of the same name, the series also stars Amanda Schull and Noah Bean.

Say Yes to the Dress: Atlanta

TLC 8:00 p.m.

Southern belles search for the perfect gowns at Bridals by Lori in Atlanta in this edition of the popular TLC fashion series. Cameras follow sales associates, managers and fitters as they try to make wedding day dreams come true.

Wake Up Call

TNT 8:00 p.m.

Rapper-producer impresario Juicy J makes a special appearance to help Dwayne Johnson get through to an aspiring rapper. It appears that the father of three has been putting his own ambitions ahead of the needs of his family.

Saturday Incredible Dog Challenge

5 2:00 p.m.

NBC brings canine competition to the small screen with coverage of this exciting event. Dogs keep viewers on the edges of their seats with events that range from dog diving and freestyle flying disk to agility competitions.

Whitney

LIFE 7:00 p.m.

Director Angela Bassett shines a light on the troubled life of music industry icon Whitney Houston (Yaya DaCosta) in this premiere movie. The film chronicles the tumultuous relationship between Houston and her husband Bobby Brown (Arlen Escarpeta).

MythBusters

DISC 8:00 p.m.

MythBusters Adam Savage and Jamie Hyneman put Hollywood to the test once again in this special edition. Viewers will want to hold on to their hats as the team shines a spotlight on the legendary Indiana Jones film franchise.

Sunday

The 72nd Annual Golden Globe Awards

5 7:00 p.m.

Tina Fey and Amy Poehler bring viewers the glitz and glamor of Hollywood as they return to co-host The 72nd Annual Golden Globe Awards, airing Sunday, Jan. 11, on NBC. Drawing some of Tinseltown's biggest stars, the prestigious awards recognize outstanding achievement in both domestic and international film and television.

Q&A hollywood

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: In "Empire of the Sun," Christian Bale's character sings "Suo Gân." Was it really him singing, or if not, who was dubbing his voice?

A: Though he was trained for the stage as well as the screen, even at the young age of 13 when he starred in 1987's "Empire of the Sun," he only lip-synched the choir solo.

A look at the official soundtrack album shows that "Suo Gân," the film's theme, was performed by The Ambrosian Junior Choir, with the solo performed by James Rainbird.

Rainbird, who is a year younger than Bale, has a pretty accomplished film career as a behind-the-scenes singer.

As a member of the King's House School Choir, he sang in the background of Tina Turner's hit "We Don't Need Another Hero" from the "Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome" soundtrack, which was released two years before "Empire of the Sun." He also performed a solo in another 1987 film, "The Magic Toyshop."

Though the coach (in this case director Steven Spielberg) sat him out, so to speak, for "Empire of the Sun," that's not to say Christian Bale can't sing. A few years later, he was singing, alone and with the ensemble, in another of his child-actor hits, 1992's "Newsies."

In adulthood, Bale's career took a distinctly darker turn. His breakout role as a grown-up star was 2000's "American Psycho," in which he plays the deranged, and oddly superficial, killer referenced in the film's title.

He is now, of course, best known to many as Batman — the most consistently bleak of the big-screen superheroes — in "Batman Begins" (2005) and its two sequels. Not a lot of call for singing there.

Q: I miss Piers Morgan on CNN. Why did he leave? What is he doing now?

A: After starting in print journalism then moving to TV journalism, Piers Morgan has decided to give online journalism a try. His new gig is as "Editor-At-Large (US)" for "MailOnline," the web portal of the British "Daily Mail" newspaper.

Reports differ as to why he left his nightly talk show hosting job on CNN early last year, but most agree that the show's persistent low ratings had a lot to do with it.

Morgan made his own case in a column published in "The Hollywood Reporter" in October, saying that he joined the network to host an interview program (much like "Larry King Live," whose time-slot he was stepping into), while CNN President Jeff Zucker wanted a news program.

Being himself, Morgan was also willing to lash out against a fellow star, suggesting that his show's poor ratings were in part due to a weak lead-in from Anderson Cooper, whom he called "stiff." (CNN rebutted, arguing that Cooper's ratings were always better than Morgan's.)

While being an online "Editor-At-Large" is still his main gig, Morgan still dabbles in television. He recently served as the official royal correspondent for the syndicated entertainment show "Extra" during a recent royal visit to New York.

He also just returned to "Celebrity Apprentice," where he was once a contestant and now serves as an adviser in the new season.

The British Royals are in the United States. We fought hard to escape them. We fought an eight-year war to get away from them, and now, they're back!

This morning, President Obama met with Britain's Prince William in the Oval Office. It was a meeting between a symbolic ruler with no real power and the future King of England.

Today in Washington, D.C., Prince William attended a reception for endangered species. Things got awkward when Prince William realized the whole event was for his family.

A second 'Startup': Restaurant investors return for a second season

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

Sometimes, you can have the greatest, the most original and the most exciting business idea in the world. The trick, though, is finding the cold, hard cash to turn that idea into reality.

That's the premise behind ABC's huge hit "Shark Tank," in which small business owners and entrepreneurs pitch their ideas to a panel of wealthy investors, hoping to secure enough cash to take their dreams up to the big leagues.

It's also the premise behind "Restaurant Startup." Its first season was a refreshing change in the culinary TV landscape, and with its second season premiering Tuesday, Jan. 13, on CNBC, a lot more restaurant entrepreneurs are about to become very happy.

Each episode of "Restaurant Startup" finds two teams pitching their restaurant concepts to a pair of investors, hoping to score the cash to start up their businesses. These investors aren't just two wealthy guys with money to blow, though; they know the restaurant business inside and out, and they're sure not going to be giving their moolah to businesses that they don't believe in.

And just who are these investors? Well, Joe Bastianich probably won't need much of an introduction. The successful restaurateur has been a fixture in "MasterChef" and "MasterChef Junior" from the very beginning, and fans of those shows know that he's a tough critic to please.

At his side in "Restaurant Startup" is Texas chef Tim Love. The owner of several restaurants, he's no stranger to the TV spotlight, either: he's been a frequent guest on ABC's "Good Morning America" and NBC's "Today Show."

With a pair of teams each pitching their restaurant concept in each episode, Bastianich and Love need a way to determine which idea is truly worth their investment. What better way to find that out than with a proof of concept? Following their pitch, each business team is handed $7,500 and given 36 hours to launch a pop-up restaurant in Los Angeles.

They won't just be cooking up food during this test period. They'll need to come up with a full business plan and a branding campaign before finally opening their doors and serving hungry diners who are always more than happy to give feedback — both good and bad.

In the end, though, it's up to the wealthy investors to decide who has the better concept for a restaurant. Like any investors, they're ultimately in it for profit, which means that only one of the teams will win the cash infusion it needs to make its dream a reality.

Season 2 of "Restaurant Startup" premieres Tuesday, Jan. 13, on CNBC.

One of the 'Girls'

HBO comedy returns for a fourth season

By Cassie Dresch
TV Media

Bestie, BFF, BF4E — they're all terms the younger (mostly) female generation uses to describe their best girlfriends. While what we call our gal pals may change, one thing is for sure: they will stick by us through thick, thin and everything in between.

TV likes to tap into these special bonds between a group of friends — think "Golden Girls," "Sex and the City" or "Gossip Girl" — and HBO is no different. The premium cabler delves into the stories of four female besties with the angsty, risqué dramedy "Girls," premiering its 10-episode fourth season Sunday, Jan. 11.

From creator, writer and director Lena Dunham ("Tiny Furniture," 2010), "Girls" centers on four 20-something women looking for love and making a life for themselves in New York City. Of course, the girls make mistakes and get into a whole slew of shenanigans — what 20-something doesn't? — but their funny adventures and misadventures are told through a darker lens, often shining a harsh, insightful light on a myriad of current social issues. Tackling topics that range from self-esteem and body image to intimacy and finances, Dunham's two-time Golden Globe-winning series is not one to shy away from the brusque realities of being a young woman struggling to get by.

The show itself hits very close to home for Dunham, who also stars, as she draws a lot of inspiration for "Girls" premise and her character — Hannah Horvath — from her real-life experiences. From struggling to become a writer to her parents cutting her off financially to many more aspects of the show, the 28-year-old outspoken actress channeled her often embarrassing battles in life into a project that not only entertains viewers but also helps educate men on what actually goes on in a girl's world.

"I think it's interesting for guys to get an insight into realistic females," Dunham said at the Television Critics' Association winter press tour in 2012. "I think there are some hotties on the show. A

Lena Dunham stars in "Girls"

24-year-old girl is not the easiest creature to dissect."

And while it is definitely true that it's difficult to dissect what goes on in the female brain — especially when they're in such a state of flux in their 20s — Dunham stresses that the show fills in the blanks between a show like HBO's "Sex and the City" and CW's "Gossip Girl." Where "Sex and the City" focused on women who were established in their careers and looking for love and family and "Gossip Girl" focused on the catty, dramalicious world of teenaged girls, "Girls" slots in for the post-college crowd of young women looking to make a name for themselves.

"There is no 'Sex and the City' revenge plot," Dunham said at the TCA press tour. "I revere that show just as much as any girl of my generation. I knew that there was a connection because it's women in New York, but it really felt like it was tackling a different subject matter. 'Gossip Girl' was teens duking it out on the Upper East Side and 'Sex and the City' was women who figured out work and friends and now want to nail family life. There was this whole in between space that hadn't really been addressed."

Of course, "Girls" wouldn't get a "Sex and the City"-esque billing if it weren't for its other dynamic actresses that make up the girlie group. Fresh off a performance as the titular character in "Peter Pan Live!," Allison Williams ("Will & Kate: Before Happily Ever After") stars as Marnie Michaels, Hannah's best friend and confidante who goes into the new season working on her music and having to deal with some love problems, including the aftermath of kissing a taken man.

Another of the 20-something BFFs is Jessa Johansson, played by Jemima Kirke ("Tiny Furniture," 2010). The beautiful Brit is a free spirit and quite unpredictable, but she's traveled the world and is back in the U.S. to reconnect with her cousin, Shoshanna (Zosia Mamet, "United States of Tara"). Shoshanna is very frequently the voice of reason and guidance within the group of girls, but the tension between her and Marnie is palpable going into season 4.

While not technically part of the "Girls" clique, it'd be remiss not to mention the main boy-toy who is the target of Hannah's affections. Adam Driver ("Inside Llewyn Davis," 2013) stars as Adam Sackler, a creative and talented young man who puts up the defenses when it comes to his love life. As was noted to Hannah in a recent new trailer for season 4: "You know Adam. He's really at his best when he's nurturing the poor, the lost, the profoundly damaged, which is why you [Hannah] were so perfect for him," and season 4 provides many more challenges for the unstable couple.

It doesn't matter what you call your best group of girl friends because, no matter what name we give them, they'll always be there for us through thick and thin. HBO taps into these strong gal pal bonds with the angsty dramedy "Girls," premiering its fourth season Sunday, Jan. 11, on the premium cabler.
