SUFFOLK GETS STUDY GRANT

President Fulham is pleased to announce that the first step will be taken toward realization of a long standing University goal. At its December meeting, the New England Regional Commission voted to accept Suffolk's proposal for the establishment of a Center for State Government Management and to fund Phase I of the project.

The first phase of the project will be funded at over $20,000 and will subsidize, first, the cost of assessing training needs at the middle management level in state government and second, the development of a model curriculum for training. The assessment will be New England wide and will take into account needs of the six New England states. The curriculum developed will also be structured for use by the New England states.

It is hoped that at the end of this first phase, a pilot program will be instituted here at Suffolk to serve as a model adaptable for each New England state.

The interest in training middle managers in state government has been a long standing one here at Suffolk. The University's close physical proximity to State and Federal offices and its involvement in government via its alumni has made Suffolk keenly aware of all facets of government.

The proposal for this project was prepared by the Department of University Development in conjunction with various University departments who will participate in the program when it is in full swing.

Support Private Higher Education

This year, the Massachusetts legislature will be asked again to consider favorably House 1881, an amendment to Article 46 of the Massachusetts Constitution. The bill would make it lawful for the General Court to make grants-in-aid to private institutions of higher education.

Last year, the bill was given favorable action by the Massachusetts House and Senate in Joint Session by a vote of 250 to 3. If acted upon favorably this year, the bill will be placed as a referendum question on the November 1974 ballot.

Needless to say, amending the Constitution to allow for financial support for private colleges and universities would mean an additional and much needed source of aid to Suffolk.

If you are concerned that private institutions of higher education receive aid, write to your senator and representative to urge his support of the bill (#1881). The future quality and availability of private higher education depend on passage of this bill.

REXFORD A. BRISTOL:

Twenty-Three Years With Suffolk

*Historical Review —
The Sixth in a Series*

1946 was a very good year for Suffolk University. She had survived the austere era of World War II and stood on the threshold of rebirth. And 1946 was the year that Rexford A. Bristol began his distinguished service as a Suffolk Trustee.

Involvement, commitment, and energy are Bristol bywords, and it was these qualities that helped shape Suffolk's destiny. Although he held senior position with the world famous Foxboro Company, he gave Suffolk his talents in her hours of need.

During those critical postwar transition years he was a powerful force in stabilizing the university. He was chairman of both the Liberal Arts and Accreditation committees, and served without any salary for two years as university treasurer. During his committee associations our college faculty

A LOOK AT CURRICULUM-

CLINICAL CHEMISTRY

Probably the most innovative program to come along lately had its start in Suffolk's Chemistry Department. In 1974, Suffolk will graduate its first students with undergraduate degrees in Clinical Chemistry. The program, as it is today is the only one like it in the State and, as of September, one of four in the country. Clinical Chemistry is not a new field, but an undergraduate sequence in clinical chemistry is a unique treatment of what hitherto was available to students only at the graduate level.

Suffolk's program in Clinical Chemistry offers a unique opportunity for a student to get into a highly specialized field immediately upon graduation.

The idea of offering clinical chemistry began last year under the auspices of the Chemistry Department. In a cooperative effort, a curriculum was structured and the program coordinated. Basically a chemistry major, clinical chemistry differs in that the student majoring in it must take biology, biochemistry, one year of calculus and physics. It further differs in its requirement of Clinical Methods coupled with two days a week in a cooperating hospital during the senior year.

For those of you who are unfamiliar with the area of Clinical Chemistry, a brief description is in order. One of the major advances in today's medicine is the sharper diagnostic service provided by the clinical laboratory. These labs are either within the hospital itself or commercial labs set up for diagnostic services.

These services aid the physician in deciding what is wrong with his patient and how to treat him. One of the specialties of the clinical laboratory is clinical chemistry.

Growth in chemical testing of body fluids in the past decade has been phenomenal and has come about, in no small measure, from the work of clinical chemists who have done much to bridge the gap between bio-medical and analytical information and medical diagnostic needs.

As a service, clinical chemistry uses a variety of analytical tests to aid the physician in his diagnosis and prevention of disease, and also to assist him in determining and monitoring the course of treatment for his patients.

The analytical services performed consist of a group of routine and special tests on blood and other body fluids. Routine tests are those done most frequently. Certain special analysis may be offered routinely, but require extra skill and a separate area of the laboratory. These include, for example, tests of hormones (endocrinology) and of poisons (toxicology). Further specialization is often made into laboratories for blood gases, pulmonary function, kidney function, chromatography, metabolic screening, and pediatric microchemistry.

This is but a small part of the scope of clinical chemistry- space does not allow a more detailed description.

It was with an eye to the myriad of developments in the field and growing need for well trained clinical chemists that the Chemistry Department structured the program. Frequently, notices of openings available for clinical chemists are received and little difficulty in placing the first graduates of the program is foreseen. The field is such that a clinical chemist can locate in or around any large metropolitan area and should have little problem finding employment.

If you or anyone you know is interested in finding out about a career in clinical chemistry, contact Dr. Maria Bonaventura, Chairman of the Chemistry Department, at 723-4700 ext. 348. She will be happy to talk with you or your friends regarding the program.

ATTRIBUTE

DR. EDWARD HARTMANN

Dr. Edward G. Hartmann came to Suffolk in 1948 with a dual mission. He was appointed assistant professor of history and director of libraries. For nearly a decade he directed our libraries up to, through, and after Suffolk's successful quest for accreditation. In the mid-50's he returned full-time to the classrooms as a full professor.

A Phi Beta Kappa, Professor Hartmann received both the Bachelor and Master of Arts degrees from Bucknell University. He also earned the B.S. in Library Studies and the Doctor of Philosophy degrees from Columbia University.

Listed in Who's Who in America, he teaches in several areas, although he is a specialist in American social and cultural history.

A native of Wilkes-Barre, Penn., the bachelor-scholar has lived on Beacon Hill, next to the State House, for several years. He is s Proprietor of the Boston Athenaeum, and the hundreds of personal volumes which wall his apartment further attest to his love of books and scholarship.

Among his many mementoes is the Hopkins medal, awarded him in 1970 by the St. David Society of the State of New York for his research studies on the Welsh in America. It is the Society's highest honor, and has been awarded annually since 1801. Among its recipients have been Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes of the U.S. Supreme Court, actor Richard Burton, poet Dylan Thomas, and politician Norman Thomas.

DEAN'S corner

Report from the Dean of Students

D. BRADLEY SULLIVAN

While I sat musing about what the content of my article to the Alumni would be, it dawned on me that I was entering my thirteenth year of service at Suffolk University. This fact alone caused my mind to wander back over the years and try to remember my early days at Suffolk beginning when four of us shared one small office in the Archer Building. At that time, the college enrollment amounted to 1,116 students and today there are 3,729 students enrolled in the colleges of the University, representing a growth of over two-hundred percent in twelve years. This growth in enrollment has been accompanied by a strengthening of the quality and the quantity of the faculty and students.

Commensurate with this expansion has been the increasing numbers and types of exciting, innovative and enriching academic programs in the sciences, business, social studies, education and the communicative arts. Suffolk's physical growth has been unique in the last six years with the construction of the Donahue Building, the remodeling of the Archer Building, the Ridgeway Lane Building, the Alumni - Public Relations Building and the College of Business Administration Building in September, 1972.

Under the fine leadership of three presidents, Suffolk University has become an integral and dynamic functioning factor, not only in the Greater Boston Community but also in many parts of the nation as evidenced by the impact made by our Alumni and faculty.

The Suffolk University college student body has grown, not only in numbers, but in diversity and in composition. For example, in contrast to 1961, when approximately 10% of Suffolk's college students were females, the female population is now approximately 30% of the enrollment. In 1961, approximately 80% of the student body lived at home and in 1972, 60% of the students live at home and the remaining 40% live in private dormitories, apartments, rooming houses and other accommodations. The majority of the college student body now enrolled at Suffolk represents students who have transferred to Suffolk from other collegiate institutions primarily the community colleges located in Massachusetts. The transfer students quickly become integrated and provide a wholesome addition to the group who entered as freshmen. The merging of these groups is probably a prime factor in helping to create an exciting atmosphere particularly in the area of student extra-curricular activities. Every week there is a substantial number of on-campus intellectual aesthetic extra curricular activities ranging from special interest group presentations and topical discussions through a multitude of general interest programs in the arts, politics and societal issues. Increased emphasis is being placed upon the need for student centers and lounges devoted to socialization and recreation.

Suffolk's commitment to the disadvantaged has been deep and sincere and as Dean Strain mentioned in the October issue of the ALUMNI NEWS, financial assistance in the colleges has grown from $167,000 in 1962 to a current program of over $500,000. Of interest to note is the fact that approximately 40% of the college financial assistance budget is specifically oriented towards the needs of students from economically and culturally disadvantaged backgrounds.

In reviewing my 12 years at Suffolk University, I recognize that we have become larger, more complex, probably more sophisticated, but we still maintain a closeness and a sense of community that probably does not exist in many other educational institutions. As Alumni, you can be assured that the dedication of the students, faculty and administration of Suffolk University is as keen and positive as ever and that continued growth will be accompanied by increased strength and determination.

was upgraded and doubled, and accreditation became a fact.

The Board of Trustees early realized his immediate and potential value to the university, and in 1950 awarded Mr. Bristol the honorary Doctor of Commercial Science degree. He had also earned degrees from Amherst College and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Mr. Bristol is now Chairman of the Executive Committee and, since 1942, a Director of the Foxboro Company, where he started working part-time as a teenager. He served in various manufacturing, engineering, sales, and financial positions until 1962, when he was elected President and Chief Executive Officer of the Company. In 1968 he was named Chairman of the Board, and in 1970 he retired as Chairman and Chief Executive Officer to assume his present duties.

His educational affiliations are numerous. He is a member of the corporation of Northeastern University, and the Museum of Science in Boston; an incorporator of Wentworth Institute; a trustee of Dean Junior College; a former trustee of the New England School of Design; and a member of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Advisory Council on Vocational and Technical Education and the Industry Advisory Committee on Automation.

Mr. Bristol also serves as a Director of the National Association of Manufacturers; The New England Merchants

National Bank; The Sentry Company; Awkwright-Boston Insurance Company; The Foxboro National Bank; and the International Center of New England, and he is an incorporator of the Stadium Realty Trust.

In business and professional associations Mr. Bristol is a member of the Scientific Apparatus Makers of America and former Chairman of its Process Measurement and Control Section; a member of the Electrical Manufacturers Club; a member of the Instrument Society of America and former Chairman of its Foundation for Instrumentation Education and Research.

His civic activities are many and varied. He is past Chairman and past President of the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation; past President of the Old Colony Council, Boy Scouts of America, and past Chairman of the Foxboro Community Chest.

Mr. Bristol is a member of the Algonquin, University, and Executive Clubs of Boston; the Foxboro Country Club; and the Woods Hole Golf Club. He is Chairman of the Library Planning Committee in Foxboro and a member of its Building Committee.

The father of three daughters and married to the former Margaret Chickering, he is a long-time resident of Foxboro, Massachusetts.

As Rexford Bristol begins his 23rd year with Suffolk he can reflect on the hard but pleasurable work he has contributed so far, and he can see the school emerging as one of the great universities in the area.

during WW II in the European theater of operations, where he earned the Combat Infantryman Badge. He also served as Combat Historian of the 90th Infantry Division. After the war, when the Air Force was organized as a separate service, he was given a direct commission. He recently retired from the active reserve with the rank of major.

An author of eminence, his publications include: Americans From Wales; A History of American Immigration; The Movement to Americanize the Immigrant; and The History of the Welsh Congregational Church of the City of New York, 1801 to 1956. He has also contributed to the Columbia Encyclopedia.

He has traveled extensively throughout the U.S. and Canada, and has several times criss-crossed all of Europe and the British Isles.

Prior to his Suffolk affiliation, Professor Hartmann held teaching positions at Ann-Reno Jr. College for Women, and City College, both in New York City, and Wilkes College in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania.

Dr. Hartmann is a member of the American Historical Association, Society of American Historians, Honorable Society of Cymmrodorion of London, Welsh Society of Philadelphia, St. David Society of the State of New York, Society of the King's Chapel in Boston, and the National Gymanfa Ganu Association of the U.S. and Canada.

Since 1948, Suffolk University has gained much from his contributions.
