Craig Ross is a wannabe Lennon

By CHRISTOPHER WILSON
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

Craig Ross, the latest in the line of D.I.Y. pop stars, gives us his perspective on the world around him. His debut album, Dead Spy Report, takes him out of production and into the limelight.

The album is a nice mix of mellow rock with a hint of anger lying underneath. Opening the disc is "Mudslide," permeated by a sense of oppression. "They got tired of you/ What they gonna do to you?" leads the listener into believing that this is going to be a delve into a "me against-the-world" attitude. However, Ross breaks from that attitude, and shifts gears quickly into the personal slant of "Out of Your World."

The lyrics are an interesting blend of social commentary and introspection. Ross can go from personal relationship dealings ("You'd just love to get me out of your world") to generational commentary, ("Everybody's faking/ Everybody's faking it") at the drop of a hat. However, all the songs go through a personal, semi-cynical filter before being put onto disc.

Dead Spy Report is a completely personal album, not only because of the lyrical content, but also because Ross plays the majority of the instruments on the album. Ambition is definitely not lacking in Ross.

Instrumentation is fairly simple guitar, bass, drums, and synth. There are, however, a few surprises, like the pedal steel guitar on "Cry." Most of the work that made this album sound interesting was done behind the boards. Very little is run through without being affected by some electronic device, which makes for interesting (if sometimes tedious) listening.

Craig Ross wears his influences on his sleeves. He is probably very proud of the fact that he can make his album sound like a bunch of John Lennon outtakes. The rough sound around the tracks is also somewhat reminiscent of a post-Girlfriend Matthew Sweet.

The total effect of Dead Spy Report is not terribly profound, but it is a good album to listen to on a semi-angry day. I recommend this album for all of you mellow cynics out there.

RAISING AWARENESS: BREAST CANCER

October is breast cancer awareness month

By ALEXANDER LOBEL
FEATURES EDITOR

October is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month. Breast cancer is the most common cancer among women.

By the end of the year, in our country, 185,700 new cases of breast cancer will have been diagnosed for 1996, and 44,560 (including 260 men) will have died from it. Just this year!

One out of eight women in the U.S. will develop breast cancer at some time in her life. Most frequently it occurs in women over 45, those who have not borne children or have their first child beyond age 30, those who have gone through menopause, have a family history of breast cancer, those in higher socioeconomic levels, obese women, and those who have experienced prior cancer of the breast, uterus, ovary, or colon.

Breast cancer awareness includes being aware of common misconceptions. A bump or blow to the breast will not cause breast cancer. Breast-feeding will not cause breast cancer, nor does it protect against it. Finally, fondling or caressing will not cause it either.

David Remmert, Director of Health Education, Campaign-Urbana Public Health District, advises that any change in the breast warrants investigation. "However," he says, "women should remember that most changes in the breast are not signs of cancer. When lumps are biopsied, only 20% turn out to be malignant."

A lump or thickening of the breast is the most common sign of breast cancer. The lump may be tender, but most often it is painless.

The second most common symptom (found in 10% of the cases) is discharge from the nipple. Sometimes the discharge is clear, sometimes milky, sometimes bloody, but, like most lumps, most nipple discharges indicate a benign condition.

Other symptoms can be dimpling or puckering of the skin, retraction of the nipple, scaly skin around the nipple, changes in skin color or texture, or swelling, redness, or heat in the breast. However, when such symptoms appear, it doesn't have to be cancer.

A mammogram (x-ray of the breast) can reveal cancers too small to be felt. The American Cancer Society recommends a baseline mammogram between the ages 35 and 40, followed by annual or biannual mammograms from age 50 on.

"Breast examinations by a physician should be part of every woman's regular checkup," says Remmert. "If a physician does not perform a breast examination routinely, a woman should ask for one."

Breast self-examination (BSE) involves regular monthly and systematic examination of the breasts and underarm areas for signs of abnormality. "Because many breasts normally feel a little lumpy," Remmert says, "the key to successful BSE is regularity. A woman needs to become familiar with the structure of her breasts, so she will readily recognize any changes in the way they look or feel." Approximately 75% of all breast cancers are discovered by the woman herself.

Early detection is very important. Today, we have no established guidelines that are likely to prevent breast cancer. Some studies suggest that low fat intake lessens the chance, which makes it well worth considering a different diet, but it does not protect a woman from breast cancer.

Other studies have exposed that mammography itself (like all x-rays) can be a cancer causing agent. Regrettably, this may have actually been the case in the past. Breast cancer cases diagnosed today may be induced years ago through irresponsible mammogram procedures and too high a dose of radiation per "shot." In the 1960s, the dose of radiation for a mammogram was up to a hundred times higher than today.

In addition, it was occasionally believed that women should begin having annual mammograms at the age of 20. Today, doctors agree that mammograms for most women under 35 are superfluous. Some even say that they are not necessary for most women under 40. This is good, since the risks of getting cancer from radiation decreases with age. It is now generally recognized that the benefit of being able to detect breast cancer at an early age of its development far outweighs the risks.

However, up-to-date mammography equipment (as required by the FDA since 1994) is only as good as the interpretation of mammograms. It is therefore good to know an experienced certified mammography technologist is reading them, rather than a technologist who does mostly x-rays of limbs and lungs and occasionally a mammogram.

It is a good idea to do some investigation to find the best place for mammography in one's area. One way to get started would be calling the American Cancer Society, National Headquarters (404) 320-333, or the Illinois Division (312) 647-6150, and asking for their recommendations.

There is much discussion about the use of the drug tamoxifen to prevent breast cancer. Initially, tamoxifen has been applied for treatment. However, it decreased the risk of recurrence in the treated breast, and reduced the incidence of new tumors in the opposite breast by 35%. This gave rise to new hopes and a new study in which tamoxifen is being tested as preventive agent on 16,000 women.

This five year study, which began in 1992, is still ongoing and results are not yet available. What makes tamoxifen objectionable are its side effects: eye problems, depression, and increased risk of uterine cancer. Nevertheless, information gained from this study could lead to the synthesis of a new drug with less serious side effects.

The tendency to contract breast cancer can be inherited. The risk for early-onset breast cancer can be assessed through genetic testing. In a few years these tests could come into routine use at many clinics.

A woman who knows that she has inherited a high risk of contracting breast cancer can use this knowledge to her advantage. She will probably have her breasts examined more often. What will happen when providers of health insurance get access to the results of genetic tests? A number of states have already passed laws to prevent such test results of being used to discriminate against patients.

The National Breast Cancer Coalition, the American Society of Human Genetics, and the National Advisory Council for Human Genome Research recommend that genetic testing should only be conducted as part of an ongoing research project until some ethical issues about disclosing information are resolved.

What should a woman who has breast cancer, or a woman who thinks she has it, do? The best thing to do is to get advice and suggestions from knowledgeable professionals in the field.

Doctors can tell their patients about their risks and options. The patient should receive all the information needed to be able to decide which option is best for her. A second opinion is often a good idea. Different doctors can look at a problem differently and still be good doctors.

BREAST SELF-EXAMINATION (BSE)

THE MOST COMMON SITES FOR BREAST CANCERS TO DEVELOP ARE THE UPPER, OUTER AREA OF THE BREAST AND THE AREA SURROUNDING THE NIPPLE. THE C-U PUBLIC HEALTH DISTRICT RECOMMENDS THE FOLLOWING STEPS FOR BSE:

1. STAND IN FRONT OF A MIRROR, INSPECTING BOTH BREASTS FOR ANYTHING UNUSUAL, SUCH AS ANY DISCHARGE FROM THE NIPPLES, PUCKERING, DIMPLING, OR SCALING OF THE SKIN.
2. CLASP HANDS BEHIND YOUR HEAD AND PRESS HANDS FORWARD. YOU SHOULD BE ABLE TO FEEL YOUR CHEST MUSCLES TIGHTEN, WHICH SHOULD EMPHASIZE ANY CHANGE IN THE SHAPE OR CONTOUR OF THE BREASTS.
3. NEXT, PRESS HANDS FIRMLY ON HIPS AND BOW SLIGHTLY AS YOU PULL YOUR SHOULDERS AND ELBOWS FORWARD. LOOK FOR UNIFORMITY AND WATCH FOR CHANGES IN SHAPE OR CONTOUR.
4. RAISE YOUR ARM. USING FINGERS OF THE OPPOSITE HAND, EXPLORE THE BREAST THOROUGHLY. BEGINNING AT THE OUTER EDGE, PRESS FLAT PART OF FINGERS IN SMALL CIRCLES, MOVING THE CIRCLES SLOWLY AROUND THE BREAST. GRADUALLY WORK TOWARD THE NIPPLE. PAY SPECIAL ATTENTION TO THE AREA BETWEEN THE BREAST AND THE ARMPIT, INCLUDING THE ARMPIT.
5. GENTLY SQUEEZE THE NIPPLE, LOOKING FOR DISCHARGE.
6. REPEAT STEPS 4 AND 5 LYING DOWN, FLAT ON YOUR BACK.

BSE SHOULD BE DONE ONCE A MONTH. THE BEST TIME TO DO BSE IS TWO OR THREE DAYS AFTER YOUR PERIOD ENDS. SELF-EXAMINATION OF THE BREASTS, REGULARLY PRACTICED, MAY SAVE YOUR LIFE.
