Student Government Announcements

Because of Professional Development Day, Student Government did not hold a meeting on the 4th.

However, significant progress is being made on some of the issues outside of the meetings...

The NAACP held a planning session at Parkland last Thursday, with the attendance of five Student Government officials.

Their plans of establishing an official Parkland College chapter seem almost certain to have the social, legislative, and financial support of the Stu-Go body.

In the last Student Government meeting, the body decided to table the issue of Educator and Scholar of the Year awards.

However, plans are being made to reactivate them, so that they may be awarded before the end of this semester. Although the outcome is not definite, it does seem that the reactivation motion will carry by a 3 or 4 vote margin.

Spring Break to assist Lakota Indians

By: SARAH ALEXANDER
PROSPECTUS STAFF WRITER

Since 1994, Parkland students have been offered an alternative way to spend their spring break.

As Susan Pinnell, Student Life Program Assistant, explains, "Instead of the traditional type of spring break, the students choose a social issue and then find a site to work on that issue. This year the positive awareness and responsibility of another culture is our social issue."

The site of this year's Alternative Spring Break is the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in Pine Ridge, South Dakota. Here the eight students and two staff members from Parkland College will be working with the SuAnne Big Crow Boys and Girls Club.

Ten people from Parkland College will be attending the Alternative Spring Break this year. The two staff members traveling with the group are Susan Pinnell and Katherine Candler.

While the majority of the students are from right here in Central Illinois, two international students are also involved. The students are Mary Kate Dennis (St. Joseph), Dawn Ramp (Sidney), Irene McHale (Ivesdale), Sara Steinman (Champaign), Julius Hewitt (Champaign), Julius Sandrock (Champaign), Atushi Iha (Japan), and Hartwig Vonbredow (Germany).

The group has already spent weeks preparing for the trip.

One of their first concerns was making money to cover some of the expenses. Fundraising for the trip began in January and will continue into March.

During January the group had two events to raise money.

The first was a raffle held at the Parkland vs. Danville basketball game. The prizes were a Parkland t-shirt, donated by the Parkland bookstore, and one year of HBO, Cinemax, or Showtime, donated by Time Warner. The second event was a pizza sale.

The most recent fundraiser was Penny Wars that took place on February 3rd. The Vet Tech ended up walking away with this event with $54.94 total pennies and $12.65 total non-pennies which gave them a positive penny count of $43.94. In all, a whopping $97.63 was donated.

Business center sees bright future The 'Buzz' on Langhofer

By: ZACH STANBERRY
PROSPECTUS STAFF WRITER

Many years in the coming, newcomer Director Mark Michaels has seen the Parkland Business Development Center through a landmark move. Within the last year, plans were completed and the move was made to 206A W. Anthony Dr., Champaign.

The building, located north of I-74 near the Neil Street exit, is behind Alexander's Steakhouse and next door to the new Flexsteel Comfort Seating Plus showroom. The totally renovated building was previously occupied by the children's play center Ants in Their Pants.

Many students are unaware that Parkland has a Business Development Center although many businesses in the area take complete advantage of the resources there. State-of-the-art facilities combined with a working staff of around eight give human touch to a virtually bottomless barrel of wonders.

The Center has capabilities that one sees only at a major TV station. From satellite broadcast capabilities to huge conference rooms with computer generated projections, this new facility offers businesses in the surrounding area another option in training.

And if they don't offer it, a class can be customized to meet the individual business's need.

Many companies send their employees to be trained at the Business Center or hold their own seminars there.

Some are unfamiliar with the types of services that the Center offers, but with approximately 10,000 students attending the Center last year, there is an immeasurably positive impact on our community.

The Business Development Center, which provides a wide variety of employee training and professional and economic development opportunities, will conduct much of its training at the new Center including the popular micro-computer workshops, the Traffic Safety Program, the Real Estate Institute classes and the Home Buyer's Seminars.

To celebrate the move to their new building, the Parkland Business Development Center is hosting an Open House/Grand Opening on March 24. This event will be open to the public all day.

The Parkland Business Development office is open from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday-Friday. For more information call 351-2235.

As April 13 approaches, student voters may recognize a new name on the ballot.

Student Government Senator Kory "Buzz" Langhofer will be setting a precedent as he runs for Parkland's Board of Trustees.

What makes this election different than others is that this is the first time a traditional student has run for this position. Commented Langhofer on being the first to run for this office, "I'm very non-traditional as far as that goes."

On Monday morning, February 8, many may have heard him being interviewed by AM 1400 WDWS on the upcoming election.

Parkland's Board of Trustees is made up of seven members, with elections running every two years.

Langhofer is fourth on the list of five candidates who will be running for three positions on the Board.

The Board is typically made up of older persons, making Buzz Langhofer stand out in more ways than one. "I'm not sure on how I'll be received, but, [if elected], I know I'll take the job seriously."

The Board makes decisions on many issues at Parkland such as tuition, faculty, curriculum, as well as building decisions.

Langhofer's goal in running is to represent the student body.

In doing this, Langhofer says he will oppose tuition increases as well as work to decentralize the power structure, giving some of the decision-making power to the faculty. "Above everything else, I want to be the students' voice. My agenda is whatever the students' concerns are."

Kevin Sullivan, of Sullivan-Parkhill, presents a check for $2,000 to Zelema Harris, president of Parkland College, on behalf of the Champaign-Urbana Auto Dealers Association.

"Non-traditional," As defined by Webster's Dictionary, means, "other than cultural continuity in social attitudes and institutions."

When applied to the student body here at Parkland, it can be rephrased as, "any student other than one who is a full-time student, attending Parkland within two years of graduating high school and pursuing a degree, certificate, or transfer to a four-year college."

Realistically speaking, this encompasses a large number of students here at Parkland. The non-traditional student may even be in the majority on our campus.

The number and variety of specific examples is limited only by the number of individuals within the category.

From the adolescent broadening his horizons and obtaining college credit, to the middle-aged single mother striving to support herself, to the full-time employee desiring an upgrade of computer skills - all need some special provisions and services to reach their goals.

Parkland offers a great many programs and services that can and do assist the non-traditional student.

For the remainder of this semester and perhaps beyond, this column will serve as an information source for you, the non-traditional student.

Each week, I will focus on a particular service provided, a specific topic of interest, a new question or problem, or an individual student profile. All will be aimed toward the non-traditional student.

As a member of this category myself, I would like to make this column as useful and interesting to all of you other "non-traditionals" as possible.

With this in mind, I request and would greatly appreciate your input and feedback. Please feel free to submit questions, ideas, comments, and constructive criticisms to Sharon via e-mail at: en-sharon@advancenet.net or written on a sheet of paper and dropped off at the Prospectus office, Room X155.

If you would like to be, or know someone who should be, profiled as an example of a non-traditional student, submit the name along with a brief description and an e-mail address or phone number for me to make contact.

I hope all of you gain some information and enjoy the column. See you next week.

Alternative Spring Break

ed by various clubs and other participants. A special thanks goes out to all who participated, making it possible for two persons to go to South Dakota.

More activities are still to come during the month of February including another pizza sale on the 10th.

On Friday the 12th, the group will be selling chocolates and having a raffle at a Valentine's Day "LUV" Cafe event, open from 10a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Flag Lounge. Bring your favorite "LUV" poems, make up one, or read one from our assortment of books. Poetry starts at 11 a.m. The prize for the raffle will be a balloon bouquet sent to the winner's loved one.

Events scheduled for later this month include a Tootsie Roll Pop sale on Wednesday, February 17th, and a breakfast sale on Wednesday the 24th.

Even in March, right before the group leaves, they have a few final activities to bring in money.

There will be a pizza sale

March 3rd and a raffle at the planetarium on the 5th. There will also be a box lunch sale on the 10th, which will be held in conjunction with Jay Rosenstein, who will be talking about the "In Whose Honor" film. During this time the American Indian Club will be having anti-chief petitions.

The students will then leave for the Alternative Spring Break on March 14 and return on the 19th.

To get to South Dakota, the Parkland group will be driving. They will be traveling with the McKinnley Foundation and some University of Illinois students in a caravan.

At the reservation, participants will work with the staff of the Boys and Girls Club and help with other community projects. They will also learn about Lakota history and culture and take a day to visit cultural sites in the Black Hills.

The Lakota people have a tradition of generosity. They give gifts for any and all occasions. One of these events is the naming ceremony, where children are given an Indian name.

The children's parents must save up things to give away for this ceremony. Since some of the parents have so little, it may take up to ten years to save up enough for their child to be named.

In the spirit of generosity, Alternative Spring Break students are each picking an item that means something to them to give to the elders at Pine Ridge. The elders will then hold these items for a child who has not been named yet. Hopefully these gifts will help the parents of a child who needs an Indian name.

The students who are going on the Alternative Spring Break are giving up their own free time to help others. This volunteering of time and energy will make a difference in the lives of others and in their own lives too.

If anyone is looking for a different and more fulfilling way to spend spring break next year, perhaps an Alternative Spring Break would be the right choice.

BEREA college

History of Berea College

By: Jerry Martin
Prospectus Staff Writer

The beginning of spring semester is a signal for many students to begin the process of deciding which four-year school to attend following their graduation.

Students pondering their next move have a number of critical factors to consider. Important decisions must be made with regard to educational quality, expense, and distance from home, to name a few.

Occasionally, a student will find a college with a unique quality that draws him or her to that institution. Nestled in the foothills of Kentucky's mountain country about 45 miles south of Lexington are a town and a college by the same name, Berea, that offers unique features in both its past and present.

Prior to the Civil War, a group of people devised a courageous, yet risky, concept. They were determined to preach and practice the biblical doctrine that "All people are of one blood," and thereby equal in pursuit of education, opportunity, and success.

However, Kentucky was still a slave state, a fact that made such a daring proposal even more dangerous. Three prominent individuals, the Rev. John G. Fee, Cassius M. Clay, and J.A.R. Rogers, sought social change in the face of what many would have considered insurmountable odds. They intended to educate people, black and white, at the same institution and on the same level.

Reverend Fee came to Kentucky from Lane Theological Seminary of Cincinnati in 1842, arriving in Lewis County where slaveholders were scarce. His views were not well received in the area churches, so he started his own church.

However, turnout at his church was so low he was prompted to write the Anti-Slavery Manual. He hoped the manual would draw attention and support. It did.

Cassius Marcellus Clay, a man of considerable means, read Fee's manual and was so impressed he decided to lend his assistance to Fee's cause. Clay had been converted to emancipation after hearing a speech by W.L. Garrison at Yale.

Clay, at least for a while, was just the type of gritty, courageous man Fee's movement needed. His reputation was one of opening meetings he conducted by first placing on his lectern a Bible, a copy of the U.S. Constitution, and a Bowie knife.

When asked why those items were being displayed, he would reply that the "Bible is for those who believe in God, the Constitution for those who believe in man, and the knife for those who believe in neither."

Once Clay had heard Fee, an eloquent speaker with a fiery rhetoric, deliver a speech on the evils of slavery, he was so impressed he offered Fee a 10-acre lot in Madison County on which to homestead. Fee accepted, moving his humble church to the lot as well.

Two years later, on a lot donated by a neighbor, Fee built a school which also became the site for services on Sunday. The teachers for the school were recruited primarily from Oberlin College, an anti-slavery stronghold in Ohio. The goal of the school was, in Fee's own words, "Giving a cheap, thorough education to all colors and classes."

In 1856, Fee and Clay split ways. Clay had political aspirations and may have felt his chances of political success and influence would be lessened if he continued his affiliation with Fee's unpopular movement. The pro-slavery forces in the area no longer had to fear Clay's power and influence. This resulted in Fee being harassed repeatedly over the next two years.

In 1858, J.A.R. Rogers arrived from Oberlin and began conducting an extra term called a "pay school." Fifteen youngsters initially enrolled for the term, which did not require pre-payment, but by the end of the term there were nearly 100 in attendance.

The next year, a constitution for a college was drawn up; it was the source of a doctrine that is still today Berea's creed--the Great Commitments. Berea College thereby was started on a 110-acre area on a ridge that also bore the name Berea.

Troubled times still loomed ahead, however, as hostilities between the North and South intensified. On Dec. 23, 1859, a group of 62 armed men gave Fee and his followers 10 days to leave.

The group acquiesced to the demands of the mob, but on their departure they took with them only the bare essentials. They were determined to return one day and continue their mission.

During the Civil War years, Fee traveled around raising money for his college, to which he firmly believed he would eventually return. In April, 1865, he did just that, and the 1866-67 class at the "Berea Literary Institute" enrolled 187 students--96 blacks and 91 whites.

In 1869, Rev. E.H. Fairchild, also from Oberlin, became the first president at Berea. During the next 50 years, Berea continued a policy of co-education of races and sexes, despite continuing unpopularity among the majority of the population in the region.

Once again, in 1904, Berea was confronted by a formidable opposing force. The State of Kentucky passed the Day Law, forbidding interracial education. The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the law, but the leaders at Berea remained united in their quest for proper education for all people. College trustees raised $400,000 to start a school for Black students--Lincoln Institute, near Louisville, Ky.

In 1950, the Day Law was amended to allow integrated education above the high school level. Berea College could, at last, again open its doors to black students, continuing its tradition of excellence and equality.

Once again, Berea would be able to contribute to the education of the African-American population, some of them destined for greatness. People like Julia Britton Hooks, a Berea graduate who stayed on as a music teacher and had as a student one W.C. Handy, the renowned author of "The St. Louis Blues." Her grandson, the Rev. Benjamin Hooks, served as executive director of the NAACP. A 1903 graduate, Dr. Carter G. Woodson, was the founder of an observance now known as Black History Month.

Now, as then, Berea concentrates its efforts on admitting qualified students from the Appalachian area. Roughly 80 percent come from that area and on average come from families earning $10,000 less than the national norm. Moreover, 82 percent of the approximately 450 freshmen enrolling each year come from the top three-fifths of their class, and many are often the first member of their family to attend college.

Further evidence of Berea's continued dedication to quality education have been documented by publications such as U.S. News and World Report. On at least eight different occasions, educational surveys published in U.S. News rated Berea as one of the top three small colleges in either a regional or national category.

More than half of all Berea students who earn degrees advance to graduate-level studies. Berea also ranked 72nd in a field of 925 undergraduate schools in a study of where Ph.D.s began their college educations.

Next on Geraldo, ... Mel Gibson gets a makeover

Ryan Fitzgerald
Prospectus Staff Writer

Yes, it's true, Mel Gibson has changed his spots.

In his newest offbeat and twisted action thriller, Payback, Gibson plays, of all things, a bad guy. And a cool one at that!

Gibson is a small-time thief who seeks revenge against his ex-wife and his best friend who shoot him and leave him for dead.

Gibson's portrayal of the overconfident and hard-assed Porter is more than convincing -- this part was written for him.

Actually, it was written for Lee Marvin, who starred in the 1967 movie

Point Blank, of which Payback is a remake.

Gibson manipulates the role with a combination of Riggs and a modern day Mad Max for this nose-to-the-grindstone action movie.

This is not an edge-of-your-seat type of thriller. It is a kick back, relax, and watch Gibson do-his-thing kind of movie.

There are no gimmicks to this one, folks: no comedic co-star, no love scenes, and, sorry to say ladies, no shots of Mel Gibson's butt. Just pure action.

Payback is a nice change for Gibson, who, after winning his Oscar in 1995, has been concentrating more on his behind-the-scenes work. It's nice to have you back Mel. We missed you!

I don't see any Oscar repeats for Mel with this film; it's just a good action movie.

Guys, you must see this film! It is a movie made for guys to see with their friends.

Ladies, tough luck on this one, but see it anyway; it's a great film.

You just can't help but like Gibson in this film. His character, Porter, has you rooting for the bad guy and asking for more.

On my rating scale of 1 to 5, this film is -- 4.

Track team gives impressive performance

By: Maggie Andrew
Prospectus Staff Writer

On Jan. 29, the Parkland Cobras track team traveled to the IWU Titan Invite. There were over 20 teams crowded into Wesleyan's indoor facility, ready to compete.

In the field events Brian Pate placed third in the high jump, while Amy Friek placed fourth in the shotput with a throw of 37' 3". Also Jesse Rhoades placed fifth in shotput in the 35 lb weight throwing 43'6".

In the running events, Kawanna Levy ran the 400 meter dash for the first time this season and qualified for Nationals with a time of 59:52. Head Coach Jeff Bovee felt that she proved her stuff. "She had an impressive performance for her first race this year," he said. Derrick Winter won the 55 meter hurdler with a time of 7:70., which also met the NJCAA qualifying time. And Ralph Holmer won second place in the the 400 meter dash.

The 4x400 meter relay team had an impressive performance. Ralph Holmer lead off, followed by Ricco Reed and Adrian Bandy. Spencer Smith crossed the finish line in second place.

"The 4x400 was pretty exciting. They are the best relay team put together. They should be able to qualify for Nationals and be the top sixth team in the nation," Bovee said.

The indoor track team is looking forward to continue this success this coming weekend at the SIU-McDonald's invite in Carbondale.

And they are preparing for the Region 24 Indoor Championship at the University of Illinois Armory held on Feb. 20 where the team will compete against all schools in the region in Champaign. Because an event like this takes a great deal of help, volunteers with an interest to measure, judge, time, etc. are asked to contact Coach Jeff Bovee at 351-2522 or Jim Reed at 351-2297.

The scheduled time for the event is from 9 am to 5 pm. Help is needed for part or all of this time.

Fitness Center saves money and time

By: Amanda Wingfield
Prospectus Staff Writer

The New Year's resolutions are in. What's at the top of your list? Losing weight? Working out?

As a college student, your funds are probably fairly limited. Gyms such as the Body Firm, The Fitness Center, and the YMCA have monthly fees that range from forty to sixty dollars, which doesn't easily fit within a tight budget.

An easy, low-cost alternative is Parkland's Fitness Center, which is conveniently located in the P wing.

This is not for Parkland students exclusively, but for students and non-students alike.

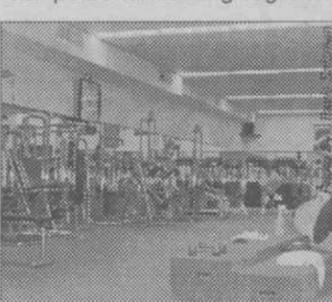

Those who want to fulfill their New Year's resolution can enroll in PEC 103, 147, 203, and 247. By working out only 24 times a semester for forty minutes, you receive an hour of transferable credit to a four-year university.

For those students not seeking credit, Parkland offers a non-credit course for $20 per semester.

Parkland's Fitness Center offers weights, treadmills, stairmasters, and some new top-of-the-line cardiovascular equipment.

The staff offers everyone assistance in strength training and conditioning, with a special personal training regimen exclusively available for credit students (by appointment only).

Fitness Center Director

Tim Cochrane's goal is, "to have people develop an appreciation for what exercise can do for them in physical fitness, state of mind, and overall well-being."

Enrollment for all credit classes will run up to mid-term, while enrollment for the non-credit class will go on all semester. For further information contact the Athletic Department in P107 at 351-2226 or Tim Wulf, located P110 at 351-2426.

Don't let your New Year's resolution go down the drain; take advantage of Parkland's Fitness Center!
